

Industrial Development in Postwar Japan

Hirohisa/Kohama

Contents

List of figures	x
List of tables	xi
Preface	xiv
1 Introduction: Japan as a developing economy	1
Understanding the postwar miracle	1
Defining the scope of my analysis	4
2 Economic development as structural change	7
Structural change in postwar Japan: the subsector view	7
The regional structure of the economy	14
The structure of the manufacturing industry	18
Economic trends and the shift to high tech	29
3 The textile industry: a leading industry in developing countries	32
The textile industry and the development phase	32
Is the textile industry labor intensive?	34
The growth and decline of the textile industry	35
Changes in supply and demand	40
4 The steel industry: a typical industry of semi-industrial countries	43
Production processes and products of the steel industry	43
The latecomer's advantage and social capability	47
Development of the Japanese steel industry	48
Competition, technological innovation, and industrial policy	52
Conclusion: the roots of the steel industry's success	54

5	The chemical industry: a huge and heretical industry	57
	“Chemicals” : the name of a technology	57
	Japan’s postwar heavy and chemical industrialization	60
	The chemical industry and industrial policy	64
	The lagging chemical industry	69
	Appendix	71
6	The general machinery industry: from import substitution to export	72
	The machine tool industry	72
	Structural change in the machine-tool industry	75
	Machine tools are the “mother machines”	83
	Promotion policies for the machine-tool industry	83
	Appendix	85
7	The electrical and electronics industries: from low tech to high tech	88
	Rapid growth and the spread of home appliances	88
	The development of the semiconductor and computer industries	100
	Appendix	114
8	The shipbuilding industry: the dilemma of industrial adjustment	117
	The image of the shipbuilding industry	117
	The Japanese shipbuilding and shipping industries in a worldwide context	120
	The postwar Japanese shipbuilding industry	125
	Promotion and adjustment policies for the postwar Japanese shipbuilding industry	132
	Appendix	138
9	The automobile industry: entrepreneurship and government intervention	140
	From an infant industry to the leading industry	140
	Entrepreneurship and industrial policy	154
	Appendix	166
10	Conclusion: the men who created the economic miracle	171
	The collective will of the Japanese people	171

Japan immediately after the war 172
Macro or micro? 184
Industrial policy or entrepreneurship? 190
A Japanese model: policy implications for the developing countries 199

Notes 202
Bibliography 210
Index 223