

MATTHEW ARNOLD

CULTURE AND ANARCHY

with

Friendship's Garland and Some Literary Essays

Edited by R. H. Super

ANN ARBOR THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN PRESS

Contents

Friendship's Garland [Part I]	1
My Countrymen	3
A Courteous Explanation	32
Letter I: I Introduce Arminius and "Geist" to the British Public	37
Letter II: Arminius Appears as His Own Interpreter	43
Letter III: I Expostulate with Arminius on His Revo- lutionary Sentiments	48
Letter IV: Arminius Assails the British Press for Its Free and Independent Comments on Foreign Politics	52
Letter V: I Communicate a Valuable Exposition, by Arminius, of the System of Tenant-Right in Prussia	57
Stein Plus Hardenberg	62
Letter VI: I Become Intrusted with the Views of Ar- minius on Compulsory Education	65
Letter VII: More about Compulsory Education	72
Theodore Parker	78
Culture and Anarchy	85
Introduction	87
Chapter I. Sweetness and Light	90
II. Doing as One Likes	115
III. Barbarians, Philistines, Populace	137

IV. Hebraism and Hellenism	163
V. Porro Unum Est Necessarium	176
VI. Our Liberal Practitioners	192
Conclusion	222
Preface (1869)	231
A New History of Greece	257
Obermann	295
Sainte-Beuve	304
Friendship's Garland [Part II]	311
Letter VIII: Under a Playful Signature, My Friend Leo, of the Daily Telegraph , Advocates an Important Liberal Measure, and, in so Doing, Gives News of Arminius	313
A Recantation and Apology	319
Melancholy if True	325
Letter IX: Arminius, Starting for the Continent to Take Part in the War Between France and Prussia, Addresses a Disrespectful Farewell to Our People and Institutions	327
Letter X: Arminius, Writing from the German Camp before Paris, Comments, in His Old Unappreciative Spirit, on the Attitude of Our Beloved Country in the Black Sea Question	334
Letter XI: I Take Up the Cudgels for Our Beloved Country	340
Letter XII: "Life," as Mr. G. A. Sala Says, "a Dream!"	346
Dedicatory Letter	351
Critical and Explanatory Notes	357
Textual Notes	487
Index	545