

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
List of Abbreviations	ix
Introduction	1
The child in Coetzee: A story waiting to be told	1
Towards a poetics of the child	7
From Levinas and Derrida to Agamben and Arendt	14
Writing and the child	19
The child as the object of writerly desire	21
The writer as child	25
Conceptions of the child	29
‘The child’ – a fluid concept	30
The child and the fully human	31
A figure of openness and possibility	35
Outline	38
1 The story of the (un)romantic child: Innocence, truth, and first fictions of the self	41
Fragments of childhoods	44
(Un)romantic children	46
Navigating fictions	53
Moments of openness	60
Authentic encounters: From self to other	63
2 Ethics of the not-so-other child	65
The savage-as-child-as-self	71
Children of iron	81
Ethics of indeterminacy	92
3 The child between past and future	95
Nativity and the event	101
Worrying about the child	103

Getting beyond death	106
Amor mundi and transmissibility	110
The interregnum, freedom, and writing	113
Pedagogy and play	117
From natality to infancy	122
4 Childish behaviour: The poetics of study	125
From waiting to 'pressing on'	128
The incessant shuttling of study	132
Grasping the potentialities of the present	134
Impotentiality and the curious state of infancy	136
Embracing uncertainty	142
From childish to childlike	145
5 The redemptive nonposition of infancy	149
The burdensome search for truth	152
Infancy and language as such	157
Being like a child: ' The revocation of every vocation '	159
Infancy and ethics	162
Writing and redemption	164
Coda	167
References	171
Index	183