

CONTENTS

|                                                                                                                         |                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| PREFACE                                                                                                                 | page ix |
| TRANSLATOR'S INTRODUCTION                                                                                               |                |
| I. Classification and Inference                                                                                         | xi             |
| II. Co-ordination                                                                                                       | xv             |
| III. Two Levels of Inference                                                                                            | xx             |
| INTRODUCTION                                                                                                            |                |
| 1. Language                                                                                                             | 2              |
| 2. Maturation                                                                                                           | 5              |
| 3. Perceptual Factors                                                                                                   | 5              |
| 4. Sensori-motor Schemata                                                                                               | 11             |
| I. GRAPHIC COLLECTIONS                                                                                                  |                |
| 1. Preliminary Statement of the Problem                                                                                 | 17             |
| 2. General Results Obtained with Flat Geometrical Shapes                                                                | 21             |
| 3. The Links between Graphic Collections and Classification :Further Illustrative Material Using Geometrical Shapes | 30             |
| 4. "Similarity" and "Belonging" in the Grouping of SmallToys                                                        | 36             |
| 5. Conclusion: Graphic Collections as a First Attempt toSynthesize Intension and Extension                          | 44             |
| II. NON-GRAPHIC COLLECTIONS                                                                                             |                |
| 1. Statement of the Problem: Criteria of an AdditiveClassificatory Structure                                        | 47             |
| 2. Non-Graphic Collections as seen with Geometrical Shapes                                                              | 51             |
| 3. Non-Graphic Collections as seen with Arbitrary Objects                                                               | 56             |
| III. "ALL" AND "SOME":CONDITIONS OF CLASS-INCLUSION                                                                 |                |
| 1. "All" and "Some" applied to Shapes and Colours                                                                       | 59             |
| 2. "All" and "Some" applied to Tests of Exclusion                                                                       | 60             |
| 3. The Absolute and Relative uses of "Some"                                                                             | 74             |
| 4. Conclusions. "Some" and "All", Inclusion and theRelations between Intension and Extension                        | 89             |
| IV. CLASS INCLUSION AND HIERARCHICALCLASSIFICATIONS                                                                 |                |
| 1. Classification of Flowers (Mixed with Other Objects)                                                                 | 100            |
| 2. Classification of Animals                                                                                            | 101            |

CONTENTS

|                                                                                                                                                         |                 |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------|
| V. COMPLEMENTARY CLASSES                                                                                                                         | page 119 |
| 1. The Singular Class in a Practical Context                                                                                                            | 120             |
| 2. Classification and the Relative Size of Classes                                                                                                      | 125             |
| 3. The "Secondary" Class in a Forced Dichotomy                                                                                                          | 129             |
| 4. Negation                                                                                                                                             | 137             |
| 5. The Inclusion of Complementary Classes and the Duality Principle                                                                                     | 142             |
| 6. The Null Class                                                                                                                                       | 146             |
| 7. Conclusion                                                                                                                                           | 149             |
| VI. MULTIPLICATIVE CLASSIFICATION (MATRICES)                                                                                                 | 151         |
| 1. Statement of the Problem                                                                                                                             | 151             |
| 2. Matrices Tests, I: Results                                                                                                                           | 154             |
| 3. Matrix Tests (Standardized Procedure)                                                                                                                | 159             |
| 4. Spontaneous Cross-Classification                                                                                                                     | 165             |
| 5. Spontaneous Cross-Classification Continued                                                                                                           | 171             |
| 6. Simple Multiplication (or Intersection)                                                                                                              | 176             |
| 7. Addition and Multiplication                                                                                                                          | 184             |
| 8. The Quantification of Multiplicative Classes                                                                                                         | 188             |
| 9. Conclusions                                                                                                                                          | 195             |
| VII. FLEXIBILITY IN HINDSIGHT AND FORESIGHT                                                                                                  | 196         |
| 1. Rearrangements Caused by the Addition of New Elements                                                                                                | 197             |
| 2. Changes of Criterion Requiring the Rearrangement of Existing Classifications                                                                         | 208             |
| 3. Anticipation, Execution and Change of Criterion in Partly Spontaneous Classifications                                                                | 216             |
| VIII. THE CLASSIFICATION OF ELEMENTS PERCEIVED BY TOUCH                                                                                      | 232         |
| 1. Experimental Procedure                                                                                                                               | 232             |
| 2. Stage I: Choice of Known Elements and Graphic Collections. No Anticipation and No Complete Classifications                                           | 234             |
| 3. Stage II: Non-Graphic Collections; Discovery of a Single Criterion first by Trial-and-Error, then by Semi-Anticipation; Difficulty in Finding Others | 238             |
| 4. Stage III: Anticipation of Two or Three Criteria. Conclusions                                                                                        | 243             |
| IX. SERIATION                                                                                                                                | 247         |
| 1. Statement of the Problem                                                                                                                             | 247             |
| 2. Seriation and the Anticipation of Serial Configurations with Elements Perceived Visually                                                             | 250             |
| 3. Tactile Seriation and its Anticipation in Drawings                                                                                                   | 261             |
| X. MULTIPLE SERIATION                                                                                                                        | 269         |
| 1. Experimental Procedure                                                                                                                               | 269             |
| 2. Stage I: No True Seriation                                                                                                                           | 270             |

CONTENTS

|                                                                                                                      |                 |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------|
| 3. Stage II: Spontaneous Seriation of One of the Two Properties, but Failure in the Multiplicative Synthesis of Both | page 272 |
| 4. Stage III: Successful Multiplication                                                                              | 274             |
| CONCLUSIONS                                                                                                          | 280             |
| INDEX                                                                                                                | 297             |