

Contents

Foreword, by Randolph Crump Miller	vii
Acknowledgments	xi
Introduction	1
Chapter One: Naturalistic Theism	13
Views of the Divine within Naturalism	13
The Chicago Naturalists	17
Edward Scribner Ames: the Divine as Idealized Reality	18
Shailer Mathews: the Divine as the Personality- Producing Activities	23
Openness to Gifts	29
Chapter Two: Creative Synthesis	33
An Empirical Approach to the Divine Creative Activity	34
The Growth of Good	35
Creative Synthesis and God	37
Is the Finite God Transcendent and Personal?	40
The Instrumental Character of the Concept of God	42
Faith as Commitment to Constant Transformation	44
Methods of Religious Living	46
Theological Realism and Worship	49
Chapter Three: Creative Interchange	53
Empiricism and Religious Experience	53
The Principle of Concretion	57
Value and Qualitative Meaning	60
The Creative Event	62
The Rejection of Speculative Metaphysics	66
The Unity and Cosmic Dimension of God	69
Chapter Four: Humanism	71
Critical Naturalism	71
Dewey's Religious Humanism	77

The Christian Century Discussion	80
Wieman's Misunderstanding of Dewey	84
Chapter Five: Pantheism	87
The Journal of Religion Discussion: Is God Dominant Power or Source of Value?	87
William Bernhardt: the Divine as Dynamic Determinant	89
Naturalistic Theism: the Divine as Creativity	93
Objective Religious Inquiry and Wieman as Christian Theologian	96
Chapter Six: Mysticism	101
Mysticism and Progressive Integration	102
Mysticism and Creative Interchange	107
The Quest for Specificity	112
Chapter Seven: Christology	115
Creative Communication and Unitarianism of the Third Person	115
The Christ-Event	121
Creative Synthesis and the Logos	130
Conclusion	133
God's Fools	133
The Theistic Stance Without the Supernatural God	136
Notes	141
Bibliography	153