

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	IX
A note on forms, conventions and references	X
Introduction	1
 Part I
The Perfect in Context – Pragmatic Categories	5
Chapter 1.
The Continuative Perfect	6
1.1. Sentences in the continuative perfect	7
1.2. Temporal notation and Reichenbach's three "time points"	8
1.3. Adverbial types relevant to the continuative perfect	10
1.3.1. Adverbials of the type "for t amount of time"	10
1.3.2. Since	11
1.3.3. Other time-span adverbials with the meaning $m = R$	16
1.3.4. General conclusions on adverbs with the meaning $m = R$	16
1.3.5. Adverb combinations of the type "for t amount of time at interval P"	17
1.3.6. Conclusions on adverbials in continuative contexts	18
1.4. The "continuousness" of events predicated in continuative perfects, and the concept "mode of occurrence"	20
1.4.1. Modes of occurrence in other tenses	22
1.5. Aspect and Aktionsart	23
1.5.1. Definitions of Aspect; aspect in English	23
1.5.2. The basic meanings of the SF and EF	29
1.5.3. Proposition classes	39
1.5.3.1. Vendler's categories	40
1.5.3.2. The effect of aspect on proposition classes	42
1.6. Proposition types, modes of occurrence and aspect in the continuative perfect	44

VI

1.6.1.	Accomplishments	44
1.6.1.1.	Time-frame interpretation	46
1.6.1.2.	Accomplishments as recurrent continuatives	49
1.6.1.3.	Accomplishments as discontinuous continuatives	50
1.6.1.4.	Concluding remarks on accomplishments in the continuative perfect	51
1.6.2.	Activities	51
1.6.2.1.	Activity propositions with actual continuatives	55
1.6.2.2.	Activities as recurrent continuatives	62
1.6.3.	Achievements	72
1.7.	Conclusion on the continuative as a category	75
Chapter 2.
	The Perfect of Experience (Experiential Perfect)	76
2.1.	General experientials	78
2.1.1.	The aspect question	82
2.2.	Limited experientials	83
2.2.1.	The aspect question	84
2.3.	Implied limitation of the time-span	86
2.4.	Ambiguity between continuative and experiential categories	88
2.5.	The adverbs often , sometimes , and always	93
2.6.	The past tense with experiential meaning	94
2.7.	Conclusion on the experiential perfect	98
Chapter 3.
	The Resultative Perfect	100
3.1.	The implication of concrete states	101
3.2.	Less tangible conceptions of “result”	110
3.2.1.	“Nil”-results	113
3.2.2.	Conclusions and judgements as “resultative” concepts	114
3.2.3.	Summary of result types	115
3.3.	The aspectual question with resultatives	116
3.4.	Borderline cases between resultatives and experientials or continuatives	120
3.5.	The adverbs yet , already , and just	126
3.6.	The past tense in American English with just , already , yet , and with resultatives in general	127
3.7.	The “Hot News” perfect	129

Chapter 4.
Categories of Perfect in Summary	132
Part II
General Semantics of the Perfect	137
Preamble
Approaches to the Question of Perfect Meaning	138
Chapter 1.
Tense References to Past Time	140
1.1. Relations between time levels	141
1.1.1. "Prospective" vs. "retrospective"	141
1.1.2. Time scales and points of orientation in formal models	144
1.1.3. Reichenbach's "point of reference"	151
1.1.4. The "embedded past" theory	159
1.2. The concept "indefiniteness"	162
1.3. A characterization of the various ways in which a past tense relates to past time	166
1.3.1. Dinsmore's "linear specification"	167
1.3.2. Adverbial references	169
1.3.3. Personal reference	173
1.3.4. The "current condition" criterion in other contexts	175
1.3.5. Other instances of interplay between past tense and present perfect	177
1.3.6. Shared knowledge	179
1.3.7. S-separation	185
1.3.8. Some conclusions on the past tense	196
Chapter 2.
The Time Orientation of the Perfect	199
2.1. Time-span theories of the perfect	200
2.2. The implication of present states	205
2.3. The collocability of perfect and non-perfect forms with certain types of adverb	209
2.4. Time orientation and conclusions on the general semantics of the perfect	214

VIII

Part III

Additional Questions and Related Problems	215
Preamble	216
Chapter 1.
The Past and Future Perfects	217
1.1. The Past Perfect	217
1.1.1. The past perfect as a “pre-preterite”	218
1.1.1.2. The question of indirect speech	218
1.1.1.3. The “inconsistent” use of the past perfect in other contexts	220
1.1.1.4. Past time adverbs and event-focus	221
1.2. The Future Perfect	223
Chapter 2.
Conditionals	225
Chapter 3.
Non-finite Perfects	228
3.1. Having + past participle	228
3.1.1. Past tense equivalence of having + participle	230
3.1.2. Causal relations and the perfect participle	231
3.1.3. Equivalence of present and perfect participles	234
3.1.4. The perfect gerund and the non-perfect gerund	235
3.2. The perfect infinitive	237
Chapter 4.
Relations between the Perfect and the Passive	240
Chapter 5.
The Status of the Perfect as a Tense	245
Chapter 6.
Markedness Relations and the Perfect	250
Bibliography	255