

Contents

	page
List of plates	ix
List of maps and tables	x
Preface	xi
1 Prologue: anthropology in the Papua New Guinea highlands	1
An approach to comparison	4
Configurations of highlands societies	5
An evolutionary perspective	7
Comparative dilemmas and methodological pitfalls	10
2 Papua New Guinea highlands prehistory: a social anthropologist's view	12
Environmental contrasts	14
Archaeological contrasts	19
The sweet potato	26
Some further points	31
Conclusion	34
3 Configurations of intensity	39
People and pigs	40
Pigs and sweet potatoes	46
Pigs and related facts	49
The rise of intensified production	53
4 Warfare	62
Types of warfare	66
Casualties	71
Marriage and warfare	73
Compensation	80
Migration and mobility	85
Conclusion: symmetry and complementarity	88
5 Leadership and politics	90
Bigmen, despots, great-men and others	92
An alternative view	98

Great-men	100
Despots	103
Bigmen and before	111
Conclusion	120
6 Social structure	123
Descent in the highlands	128
Comparative trends	133
The ethnography	140
Conclusion	166
7 Male–female relations	168
Male initiations and male–female relations: the theoretical past	169
‘RH’ in ‘SWNG’	176
‘Brideservice societies’	187
Baruya and Sambia sexual relations	192
The ‘nama’ region	199
Central Wahgi societies	214
The ‘western highlands’	220
Conclusion	230
8 Ceremonial exchange	233
Scale	235
Contexts	242
‘Home production’, finance and consumption	245
Units	252
Partnerships	260
Moka and tee (and mok ink): their interrelated past	263
The paradox of exchange	268
9 The legacy of the past	271
Renewed warfare	273
Bigmen and ‘big peasants’	276
Males and females	279
The resilience of ceremonial exchange	283
Bibliography	287
Index	307