Prologue	1
1 Two Hypotheses	5
Introduction	5
Previous Attempts to Scan Beowulf	7
The Making of the Consensus on Verses	10
The First Major Hypothesis: Lineation Implies a Method	18
The Second Major Hypothesis: Lineation Is the Key to Prosodic Constituents	21
Reconstructing the Rhythm of Beowulf	27
2 From Sign to Syllable: The Poet's Syllables as the Data of the Prosodist	29
3 Recoverable Features and Functions of Syllables	39
Introduction	39
Stress	40
A Simple Binary Sorting	40
An Inventory of Stressed Syllables	41
Stressed and Unstressed Pronouns	41
Compounds	42
Formatives	43
Problem Syllables	43
First Coda: Attempts to Lineate (Stress)	44
Lineation Based on Four Stressed Syllables per Line	44
Lineation Based on a Count of Long Stressed Syllables	46

A New Theory of Alliteration	49
Three Hypotheses Concerning Alliteration	49
Significant/Incidental Alliteration	49
Dominant/Subdominant Alliteration	50
Range	51
Second Coda: Attempts to Lineate (Alliteration)	52
Clauses and Clause Boundaries in Beowulf	54
Introduction	54
The Core Relationship	55
The Isolation of "Clauses"	63
Fully Expressed Clauses	64
Infinitive Phrases	67
Adjectives in Beowulf	68
Clauses Showing Deletion	71
Introduction	71
Subject Deletion	72
Verb Deletion	74
Subject and Verb Deletion	75
Test-Frames for Deletion	78
How Many Kinds of Deletion Are Necessary?	80
Difficult or Ambiguous Clause Boundaries	80
Discontinuous Clauses	80
"Sharing" Clauses	81
Blends	81
"Intruders" and "Semantic Isolation"	82
Third Coda: Attempts to Lineate (Clause Boundaries)	84
Proclitics and Verse Lines	86
Prepositions	88
Demonstrative Pronouns	88
Possessive Pronouns	89
Summary: Features and Functions of Syllables and Verse Lineation	89
4 Systematic Lineation and Half-Lining: Testing the First Major Hypothesis	90
The Emergence of the Verse Line	90
The Emergence of the Halfline	92
Major and Minor Hypotheses Regarding Lineation	96
Verse Lines and Halflines Determined by Programmed Lineation	97

5	The Second Major Hypothesis	110
	Kemble's Legacy: A Matched Corpus of Verse Lines in Beowulf	116
	Subcorpus I: Matched Two-Segment Lines	117
	Subcorpus II: Matched Three-Segment Lines	117
	Subcorpus III: Matched Four-Segment Lines	123
6	The Challenge: Halfline Constituents of Synthetic Halflines as the Key to Beowulfian Prosody	125
	Introduction	125
	Nonalliterating HCs as Single HCs	126
	Simple Alliterating HCs as Single HCs	128
	Simple Alliterating HCs as Templates	130
	The Resolution of Short Stressed Syllables	131
	Simple Templates	135
	Simple Constituents of Intact Halflines	137
	"Augmented Segments"	142
	Are "Augmented" Segments Single HCs?	146
	Inner Stressed (Nonalliterating) Syllables as Markers of HCs	148
	Stress Reconsidered	151
	Conclusion	152
7	Comparing Prosodic Constituents	153
	Introduction	153
	Rules of Distribution	156
	Empty Parts	159
	Building the Grid	163
	Stacking: In General	183
	Detailed Commentary on Some Results of Stacking	184
	The "Rule of Three"	184
	Verse Lines and Halflines as Prosodic Units	186
	Replotting Halflines: Two HCs or Three?	187
	Conclusion	189
8	Kemble's Additional Principles of Lineation: Replotting Mismatches	190
	Kemble's Two-HC Norm	190
	Plotting Mismatches onto the Grid	192

9	The Rhythm of Beowulf	201
	Summary of the Evidence for Interpreting the Data as Indicating a Rhythm	203
	Definitions of Prosodic Units	206
	Stress and Rhythm	206
	Appendix A	Procedures for Systematically Eliciting Verse Lines and Halfines from Manuscript Lines	209
	Appendix B	How to Scan the Verses of an Edited Text	212
	Appendix C	Encoding the Syllables of the Manuscript for Computer	216
