

Computers and Family Therapy

Journal of Psychotherapy & the Family
Volume 1, Numbers 1/2

CONTENTS

Foreword	xi
Preface	xiii
Computers and Family Therapy: An Introduction	1
Charles R. Figley
Purpose	2
Objectives	2
Organization and Content	3
Computers, Family Empowerment, and the Psychotherapist: Conceptual Overview and Outlook	9
Rowan A. Wakefield
The Computer Family Member: An Empowerer of Families	10
Education/Homework	11
Friction	12
As Business Assistant in Work at Home	13
As Surrogate Professional	13
The Home Computer as Family Communicator	14
Defining New Social Structures	15
Use as an Office Resource	16
The Computer as a Change Agent	16
Future Outlook	18
Barriers to Practitioners' Use of Information Technology Utilization: A Discussion and Results of a Study	21
Karen B. Levitan Elizabeth A. Willis
Approach and Methodology	23
Methodology and Findings From Questionnaire Survey	24
Methodology and Findings From In-Depth Interviews	27
Discussion	30
Conclusion	33

The Use of Computers in Marital and Family Therapy	37
Philip H. Friedman
Client, Computer and Therapist Interaction	38
Client Intake and Records	39
Assessment/Evaluation/Tracking Changes	40
Client Feedback	42
Client Information and Instruction	43
Financial Records and Billing	44
Other Uses	44
Conclusion	46
A Computer Data Based Management System for a Family Therapy Clinic	49
D. Eugene Mead
Michael W. Cain
Karen Steele
Introduction	49
A Data Based Management System	50
Indexing Systems for Problems, Goals, and Interventions	54
Clinical Decision Making with a Data Based System	57
Conclusions	61
Computer-Aided Assessment: Design Considerations	89
Larry L. Constantine
Computer-Aided Assessment: Analysis of Applications	91
Basic Design Considerations	94
Cases: Two Systems for Computer-Aided Assessment	99
Conclusions	102
Microcomputers for Couple and Family Assessment: ENRICH and Other Inventories	105
David H. Olson
Advantages of a Microcomputer for Therapist	105
Advantages for Couples and Families	106
Selection of Microcomputer Components	107
Five Functions for the Microcomputer	109
Marital Assessment Using ENRICH: An Illustration	110
Summary	114

MATESIM: Computer Assisted Marriage Analysis for Family Therapists	117
Marlene W. Lehtinen Gerald W. Smith
Case Study	117
Literature Review	118
MATESIM Rational: Theory of Decision Analysis	119
Background	121
MATESIM II	123
Marriage Therapist Reference	128
Limitations	129
Future Directions	130
Authors' Note	130
The Multiple Vantage Profile: A Computerized Assessment of Social Organization in Family Therapy	133
Brent J. Atkinson Paul N. McKenzie Bradford P. Keeney
The Multiple Vantage Profile	134
Organization of Data and Clinical Application	137
The Ongoing Measurement of Change	148
The Therapist as Part of the System	149
Conclusion	151
Knowledge Utilization and Decision Support Systems in Family Therapy	153
Gerald J. Bostwick, Jr.
Introduction	153
Process of Knowledge Utilization	154
Computers and the Knowledge Utilization Process	157
Computerized Decision Support Systems (Knowledge Utilization) in Family Therapy	158
Summary	164
The Application of Computer Technology to Behavioral Marital Therapy	167
Nicholas S. Aradi
Rationale	168
Computerization of Behavioral Marital Therapy	168

Other Clinical Applications	174
Ethical Considerations	175
Summary	176
Teaching Systems Psychotherapy With Micro-Computers: A Creative Approach	179
Randy Gerson
The Dumb Computer	179
The Advantages of the Micro-Computer	180
The Systems Psychotherapist and the Computer	181
Computer-Generated Genograms	181
Therapy Simulation—A Training Tool	185
Speculations on the Future	187
Conclusions	189
Computers and Family Therapy: An Epilogue	191
John A. Constantine
The Future	191
Final Note	195
Glossary	197