

Contents

Acknowledgments	vii
Introduction	1
1 To instruct without displeasing: Percy Shelley's The Revolt of Islam and Robert Southey's Thalaba the Destroyer	11
Instruction in The Revolt of Islam	13
Tyranny: the Orient's chief export	17
Tyranny's comrades: religion and sexism	21
Orientalism and Shelley's poetics	25
Morals vs. materials: instruction and pleasure in Thalaba the Destroyer	28
The desert, Islam: foreignness as a hermeneutic category	33
Foreignness general and particular: character as archetype	35
Extremes: too many notes?	41
Southey and his readers: delighted, informed, or distressed	45
Representation and the "Arabesque ornament"	47
2 Representing, misrepresenting, not representing: Victor Hugo's Les Orientales and Alfred de Musset's "Namouna"	54
Hugo's preface: poetic ideals and the Orient as subject	55
"La Douleur du pacha": the Orient as origin or as end	59
"Adieux de l'hôtesse arabe": stasis	62
"Novembre": returning to Paris, the self, and mimesis	65
Hugo's critics: E.J. Chételat	70
George Gordon Byron's Don Juan : "But what's reality?"	74
"Namouna": fragmentary representation	79
No narrative, no representation	85
Authority, referents, and representation	90
The Middle East: "impossible à décrire"	97

3	Orientalist poetics and the nature of the Middle East	101
	William Wordsworth and the nature of the Middle East	103
	Felicia Hemans's ambivalence	109
	Truth in illustrating Robert Southey and Thomas Moore	113
	Leconte de Lisle: "Le Désert," "le désert du monde"	118
	Théophile Gautier: the composite desert	125
	"In deserto": European nature in absentia	130
	Out of the desert: Byron's "Turkish Tales"	136
	Matthew Arnold in Bukhara: nature in the Middle Eastern city	141
	Alfred Tennyson's Basra: natural phenomena and urban construction	147
	Orientalist poetics, Oscar Wilde	152
4	The Orient's art, orienting art	155
	A confederation of the Middle East and art: Wordsworth	155
	The Middle East as a source of art: Leconte de Lisle	157
	Middle Eastern art and Gautier's imagination	164
	Nightingales and roses I: Walter Savage Landor and oriental literature	171
	Nightingales and roses II: Moore and the Orient as an ideal	175
	Hemans's Middle Eastern models	178
	Grounding a poetics in the 1001 Nights : Tennyson	183
	The Orient and Tennyson's p(a)lace of art	187
	Gautier's orientalist poetics and art for art's sake	192
	Orientalist poetics, Oscar Wilde: culmination	199
	Bibliography	202
	Index	216