

CONTENTS

	Page
Part One: Subject matter, procedure, purpose	1
I. Preliminary remarks: About Scottish literature	1
II. The critical approach: An American parallel	3
III. Scottish literary criticism: models and achievements	9
IV. Towards a theory of Scottish fiction: the problem of a 'Scottish myth'	12
V. From contradiction to mediation: analytical guidelines	19
VI. The selection of material for analysis: Principal criteria and technical considerations	23
VII. Summary and preview	28
Part Two: Fictional Scotlands, fictional Scots. The worlds and people of recent Scottish novels	30
I. City vs. country: Hell and the Garden	30
1. Rural settings: C. M. Fraser, Rhanna at war ; R. Grant, Strathalder ; C. Macleod, Devil in the wind ; D. Toulmin, Harvest home ; M. Walsh, The key above the door	35
Man and environment	35
Individual and community	43
The problem of change	50
2. Small-town life: J. Caird, The umbrella-maker's daughter ; R. Jenkins, A would-be saint ; I. C. Smith, An end to autumn ; E. Kyle, A summer scandal	55
Fear and violence	56
Schools, books, and teachers	61

	Page
Nowhere land: Elisabeth Kyle, A summer scandal	66
3. Urban novels	69
A. Edinburgh: J. Bruce-Watt, The captive summer ; C. Douglas, Bleeders come first	70
Social boundaries	71
Divided lives	75
Minor versions of Hell	78
B. Glasgow magnified: A. Gray, Lanark	79
Two cities	81
Infernal images	88
II. Social class and individual identity:	93
R. Jenkins, Fergus Lamont ; L. Macintyre, Cruel in the shadow ; J. I. M. Stewart, Andrew and Tobias ; J. Webster, Beggarmans country
The backgrounds: models of society	94
The characters: conformers and rebels	98
III. The ever-present past	114
1. Endings and beginnings: the 18th and 19th centuries in R. Crampsey, The Edinburgh pirate ; Helen B. McKenzie, The Sassenach ; Elizabeth Sutherland, The weeping tree	116
Legal vs. moral judgement	118
Action and suffering	125
Stories and history	131
2. The shaping of a nation: the 11th, 12th and 13th centuries in N. Tranter's Macbeth the King , David the Prince , and True Thomas	135

	Page
Truth vs. misconceptions	137
The nation's progress	142
3. History as a family matter: A. Blair, The rowan on the ridge ; A. Massie, The last peacock	148
Generation conflicts: youth and maturity	149
Inside, outside	153
IV. 'Outside' points of view: rôles and challenges	158
1. The childhood perspective: A. Smith, The magic glass ; I. C. Smith, On the island ; E. Tennant, Wild nights ; F. Urquhart, Palace of green days	158
The sexual issue	160
Worlds of imagination	165
Authority confronted	175
2. The female view: M. Allen/M. Elder, The walls of Jericho ; J. Lingard, The second flowering of Emily Mountjoy	181
Conventional vs. unconventional women	183
Men in women's eyes	188
V. The Scot abroad	193
1. Innocents at large: J. Biggar, Edwina alone ; C. A. McLaren, Crows in a winter landscape	195
2. Impossible escape: S. Hutchison, Scully's lugs	203

	Page
Part Three: Conclusions and outlook	207
References	218