

Contents

PART I

The Colonial and Revolutionary Period

CHAPTER	PAGE
1. THE BACKGROUND OF COLONIAL LITERATURE	3
Definition—intellectual sources—Renaissance and Reformation—the middle class—motives for colonization, economic, patriotic, and religious—conditions for literature in the early colonies—Virginia and the southern and middle colonies—New England
2. EARLY TRAVELLERS AND OBSERVERS	17
Captain John Smith; his “American” quality—John Pory—William Strachey—Colonel Henry Norwood—John Hammond—George Alsop—Adriaen van der Donck—Daniel Denton—the Swedish settlements—the Carolinas—John Lawson—William Penn and the Pennsylvania Quakers—William Byrd of Virginia
3. PURITAN PREACHERS AND PROSE WRITERS	35
Character of early New England literature—William Wood—Thomas Morton—Francis Higginson—Puritanism; its encouragement of learning and writing—the Puritan literary theory; its theological and psychological bases—the influence of the audience—the “plain style”—Nathaniel Ward—Roger Williams—Puritan sermons—Thomas Hooker—Thomas Shepard—later changes in the sermon style—drama form in Puritan writing—Puritan story-telling—Joseph Morgan—books of “remarkable providences”—Increase Mather—the Mather family—Cotton Mather; his views on style; his Political Fables ; his “spiritualizing essays”—the later influence of Puritanism
4. POETS AND POETASTERS	53
The Puritan impulse toward poetry—lack of interest outside New England—early Virginian verse—Ebenezer Cook of Maryland—Thomas Godfrey and William Livingston—New England verse—Edward Taylor—Mather Byles and Joseph Green—Benjamin Tompson—The “Bay Psalm Book”—Michael Wigglesworth—Anne Bradstreet
5. COLONIAL HISTORIANS	66
Motives for colonial historiography—William Strachey—Captain John Smith’s Generall Historie —a narrative of Bacon’s rebellion—Robert Beverley—histories in Carolina and Georgia— A True and

CHAPTER

Historical Narrative by Tailfer and others—Samuel Smith—William Smith of New York—Cadwallader Colden—special motives for historical writing in New England—the providential interpretation of history—William Bradford—John Winthrop—Edward Johnson—attempts to revive piety by providential history—Nathaniel Morton—historians of the Indian wars—Increase Mather—John Mason—Benjamin Church—Samuel Penhallow—William Hubbard; his General History; his neglect of the providential theory—the Indian “captivities”—Mary Rowlandson—Jonathan Dickinson—the effect of the “captivities”—Daniel Gookin’s defense of the Indians; his plan for a general history—Cotton Mather’s Magnalia—Thomas Prince—William Stith—Dr. William Douglass—Thomas Hutchinson

6. ASPECTS OF EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY
COLONIAL CULTURE

85

Population—lines of cleavage in the colonies—unifying forces—the fine arts and the analogy to literature—foreign vs. native standards—colonial scientific interests—the secularization of society and the decline of the old religious ardors—the ideas of the Enlightenment—education—the colleges—libraries—booksellers and printers—almanacs—the Ames and their almanac—newspapers—Boston News-Letter—the Zenger trial—the New England Courant—New England Weekly Journal—Virginia Gazette—Pennsylvania Gazette—magazines—General Magazine and American Magazine—nature and importance of the magazines—William Livingston—Provost William Smith—encouragement of native writers—variety in content of magazines—music—the feminine audience—illustrations—foreign language periodicals—Noah Webster’s American Magazine—Cotton Mather, the scientist—Charles Chauncy, the theologian—the Great Awakening—Samuel Johnson, scholar and philosopher—Sarah Knight’s account of her colonial travels—Dr. Alexander Hamilton’s Itinerarium

7. JONATHAN EDWARDS AND BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

106

The contrast between the two—Edwards’s life; reading of Locke and Newton; his conversion; the “new simple idea”; concern for emotion in religion and study of religious psychology; views on church membership; defense of Northampton revivals and Great Awakening; central theological doctrines; opposition to Arminianism; Enquiry into the freedom of the will; vision of true freedom; idea of virtue and of God’s purpose in creation; imaginative and intellectual power in the History of . . . Redemption; style; Images or Shadows of Divine Things; use of images from nature; sense of mystery; importance for later artists—Franklin’s life; varied achievements; religious attitude; relation to Puritanism; practical moral attitude; position as an American hero and prophet; views on music; on education; scientific attitude; adaptation of literary method to audience; use of the hoax; letter to Mme Helvetius; aphorisms; interest in living language; in the comic—importance of Franklin and Edwards in American intellectual history

CHAPTER	PAGE
8. WOOLMAN, CRÈVECOEUR, AND THE ROMANTIC VISION OF AMERICA	124
Woolman the spokesman of colonial Quakerism; his life; Journal; essays—Sewall and other writers against Slavery—Woolman's anti-Slavery views; pacificism; economic principles; style—Michel-Guillaume Jean de Crèvecoeur; his life; style; Letters from an American Farmer; attitude toward the New World; love of nature; popularity abroad—influence of colonial writing on some European ideas about America—Jonathan Carver's Travels—John Bartram—Lewis Evans—William Bartram
9. THE LITERATURE OF THE REVOLUTIONARY CONTROVERSY	136
The literary background of the Revolution—John Wise—Jonathan Mayhew—contribution of the nonconformist clergy to the Revolution; their influence in the colleges—the attitude of the colonial Anglicans—Jacob Duché—Jonathan Boucher—the lawyers—Daniel Dulany—James Otis—John Adams—the Loyalists—Joseph Galloway—Daniel Leonard—John Dickinson, the patriot penman—Samuel Seabury, the best of the Loyalist writers—Alexander Hamilton's reply to him—Thomas Paine, revolutionary propagandist
10. THE EXPANDING LITERARY HORIZON	156
Effect of the Revolution on writers and audiences—Francis Hopkinson—John Trumbull—The Progress of Dullness—M'Fingal—Trumbull's interest in the stage—theatrical conditions in the colonies—paucity of American playwrights—the effect of the Revolution on drama—Thomas Godfrey's Prince of Parthia—plays on American themes—Mercy Warren's patriotic plays—other Revolutionary dramatists—Robert Munford—Philip Freneau; his career; forced into political and satiric writing; his ideas; his poetic technique—the Tory satirists, Joseph Stansbury and Jonathan Odell—Freneau's satires; his poetic achievement—the relation of Revolutionary literature to colonial writing—the importance of the colonial period in the history of American literature

PART II

The Establishment of National Literature

11. POLITICS AND POETRY	175
The writings of Washington, Madison, Jefferson, and Hamilton—the Federalist papers—letters as literature, Abigail Adams—Federalist and Democrat in literature—Dwight, Barlow, and Humphreys—national songs
12. EARLY FICTION AND DRAMA	190
Early types of fiction—the sentimental novel of intrigue—the romance of adventure—Brockden Brown's idealistic treatment of

CHAPTER	PAGE
native characters in a realistic background; his influence on American and British writers—difficulties of the theatre—the coming of comedy in Royall Tyler—William Dunlap, first playwright producer—James N. Barker, dramatist of national themes—John Howard Payne, playwright of universal motives
13. NATIONAL AND UNIVERSAL THEMES	211
The combination of national and universal impulses in Washington Irving, a pioneer in the short story; his familiar essay; his history and biography; his attack on the "small town mind"—James K. Paulding's fiction—John Neal in fiction and essay—Nathaniel Parker Willis, the urbane note in essay and fiction
14. THE ROMANCE OF HISTORY AND THE FRONTIER	226
James Fenimore Cooper, novelist of the forest and the sea—the frontier of the West and South—Timothy Flint and James Hall—Mrs. Kirkland's Northwest—Longstreet's Georgia Scenes —New England romance by Miss Sedgwick and Mrs. Child—Robert M. Bird's romance of Mexico, of the Revolution, and of Kentucky—the Southern romances of history, John P. Kennedy, William Gilmore Simms—Herman Melville's exotic frontier; the conflict of man and beast in Moby Dick
15. THE FRONTIERS OF LIFE AND DEATH	248
William Cullen Bryant, the poet of the abstract, of nature, death, and the past; his translation of the Iliad and the Odyssey ; his prose; Lectures on Poetry ; his public addresses and editorials; his description of the American Scene; his unique contribution to our literature—Fitz-Greene Halleck; his concrete poetry of Death; his verse tributes to Drake and Burns—Joseph Rodman Drake, poet of fancy—Richard Henry Dana
16. IDEALISTIC REVOLT AND REFORM	262
Unitarianism and Transcendentalism in New England—W. E. Channing the elder—Theodore Parker—native and foreign inspiration—the "Transcendental Club"—Brook Farm—the Dial —Orestes Brownson's Boston Quarterly —other periodicals—Henry David Thoreau, the individualist, the lover of nature; his limitations
17. INTUITION AND INDEPENDENCE	276
Emerson's many sided life; his Transcendental period; his first book Nature ; his central thought, the supremacy of the primal mind; the relation of the primal mind and the individual lead to his study of Oriental philosophy; the independence of the individual; his practical idealism; his volumes of essays; his artistry in verse; his choice of "Representative Men"; his description of England; his criticism of science; his influence on the thought of his own day in America and England

18. BEAUTY AND THE SUPERNATURAL 292

Poe's ancestry and early life; his devotion to poetry and his first volume in 1831; his hard struggle and his early fiction; his success as editor of the Southern Literary Messenger and Graham's Magazine; The Raven and Other Poems establishes his reputation; the death of Virginia and his friendship with women; his death and Griswold's forgeries in his attack upon Poe's reputation; defences by Willis and Graham; analysis of Poe's poetry and fiction; his mastery of verse; his treatment of the supernatural and of science; his great influence here and in Europe and South America; his stories of ratiocination—Fitz-James O'Brien as a pupil of Poe

19. THE ROMANCE OF THE MORAL LIFE 308

Hawthorne's life, his short stories of Colonial history and of the supernatural; his progress from the short story to the novel; the effect of sin in The Scarlet Letter; the origin of that symbol; the tradition of evil in The House of Seven Gables; the satire on reformers in The Blithedale Romance; his consulate at Liverpool; the maturity of conscience in The Marble Faun; the novels unfinished at his death; the tributes by Emerson and Holmes; his permanent artistry

20. WIDENING HORIZONS IN POETRY 322

Longfellow as a representative of two tendencies, to relate poetry to native scenes and to broaden the horizons of interest; early narratives and prose romances; the great narratives, Evangeline, Hiawatha, Miles Standish; dramatic poetry; his philosophy of composition; his supreme achievements, the sonnets; foreign influence upon Longfellow; Longfellow's influence upon European and Asiatic literatures; the great number of translations of his poetry; his supreme position as a world artist

21. THE HEIGHT OF THE PROVINCIAL 347

Early life and influence on Whittier; he joins the Abolition crusade; his most significant work, the description of New England life in Snow Bound and other poems; his hatred of persecution and his love of democracy; his prose; the uneven quality of his work and his sectional appeal—Bayard Taylor's early life; his encouragement by Whittier; popularity of his travel books; his most significant work, the poetry of rural Pennsylvania; his best novel, The Story of Kennett, a provincial institution; his translation of Faust still the best in English; his Ministry to Germany

22. THE RATIONALIST IN LITERATURE 361

The significance of Holmes in the development of American thought; his poetry; the Breakfast Table Series of Essays; his imaginative treatment of versification; his success with social verse; his one great novel, Elsie Venner; his devotion to New England

CHAPTER	PAGE
23. PATRICIAN DEMOCRACY	374
Lowell's devotion to freedom; his early life; Conversations on the Old Poets; the three great poems of 1848; influence of Maria Lowell; editor of the Atlantic Monthly, of the North American Review; Minister to Spain and to Great Britain; phases of his poetry; the great odes; his democracy; his essays, descriptive, historical, familiar, educational
24. THE FOUNDATIONS OF AMERICAN CRITICISM	384
Descriptive, destructive, analytic, and constructive criticism—early criticism—Bryant's discussion of basic principles—Poe's independence, his constructive definitions of poetry, and of the short story; his belief in universality in art; his dramatic criticism; his "Philosophy of Composition"; his limitations in the "Rationale of Verse"; the summit of his criticism in "The Poetic Principle"; the influence of his criticism abroad—Emerson the intuitive critic; his reading as inspiration; his "American Scholar," a critical declaration of independence; his best criticism, that on poetry; his limitations in treating drama and fiction; his brilliant insight in the Essays on "Shakespeare" and "Plato"—Lowell's ability at depicting the characteristics of a literary period, or of a race; his belief in universality in literature; contrast of the early and later essays; his understanding of Spenser, Shakespeare, and Pope; his analysis of Hamlet; his wide reading and assimilative power
25. LITERATURE, POLITICS, AND SLAVERY	423
The role of men of letters in politics—the party of leadership and the party of institutions—the preservation of the Union and the abolition of slavery—Webster's identification of liberty and Union—the party of leadership attracts Irving, Bryant, Bancroft, Cooper, and Hawthorne—the patrician democracy of Cooper and his hatred of oligarchy, in his fiction and essays—Bancroft's History reveals the growth of the idea of Union in the Colonies—Hawthorne's support of the party of leadership as a "War Democrat"—The Scarlet Letter, and attack upon the "small town mind"—Emerson's criticism of the Whigs for not facing the Slavery question, his early attacks on the Union, his political foresight—Longfellow's great service to the cause of the Union in his "Building of the Ship," the effect of Fanny Kemble's recitations of the poem; its effect in England—Whittier as a practical politician; his attacks on the Union; his poetic crusade against Slavery—Lowell's many political writings; his fundamental love of freedom; The Biglow Papers' support of Abolition; his attack on the Whigs for cowardice; his poetic and editorial services in defence of the Union during the Civil War—Boker's services to the Union in politics and in poetry—Thoreau's secessionist doctrine and his defence of John Brown—Mrs. Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin and her predecessors in anti-Slavery fiction—Northern writers who held the Union more important than Abolition—Poe's attitude toward Slavery—literature of secession and pro-Slavery, Simms, Grayson, and others—pro-Slavery

novels—the choice of the party of leadership by a majority of the men of letters, until the Civil War; their welcome of Lincoln as a representative of the Union

26. REVOLT AND CELEBRATION IN THE DRAMA 466

Changes in drama and theatre caused by social and economic conditions of the people—Penn Smith and democracy in the drama—R. M. Bird's revolt against tyranny in The Gladiator and other sterling plays—Willis's Tortosa—other historical plays inspired by democratic revolt abroad and Jackson's victory at home—triumph of the poetic drama—Boker's tragedies and comedies culminating in Francesca da Rimini, the supreme achievement in drama of the nineteenth century—American history on the stage in prose; the Indian plays, dramas of Colonial life, of the Revolution, of contemporary events—Abolition plays—Uncle Tom's Cabin on the stage—dramatic types in the Yankee plays, the dramas of low life, social satires—the development of Rip Van Winkle—Negro characters in drama—Boucicault's influence on our stage, his Octoroon and his plays of Irish life; his creation of the travelling company and its profound effect on the stage

27. THE LITERARY HISTORIANS 519

Bancroft's History of the United States; his research in England and France; his dramatic style and character drawing; his philosophy of history; his Literary and Historical Miscellanies—Prescott's struggle against optical handicaps; his Ferdinand and Isabella; his critical work; his Conquest of Mexico and Conquest of Peru; his wide scholarship and impartiality; his character portrayal—Motley's two novels; his Rise of the Dutch Republic and The United Netherlands; an advocate rather than a historian; contrast with Prescott—collectors and editors of historical sources

28. LITERATURE AND THE ALLIED ARTS 534

Parallel developments in literature and in painting, sculpture, architecture, and music—the school of portrait painters founded by C. W. Peale and Gilbert Stuart—historical paintings; the influence of classical literature and the Bible—William Dunlap's chronicles of the arts of drama and of design—union of literary and plastic arts in Washington Allston; his influence upon other artists—Emerson's theory of the arts—reciprocal influence of literature, theatre, and painting in Thomas Sully—pastels and miniatures—the "primitives"—Genre painting of Henry Inman, J. L. Krimmel, W. S. Mount, and G. C. Bingham parallel the depiction of American life by Longfellow, Whittier, and Lowell, and by the dramatists; the Indian and the Negro types in poetry, fiction, painting, and sculpture—paintings of the "American Scene" in Philadelphia, and the "Hudson River School"—collaboration of Irving, Bryant, Cooper, Willis, and Taylor with painters like Cole, Church, Kensett, and Weir in the Home Book of the Picturesque—democracy in the Currier and Ives Prints—painting and science joined in Audubon—sculpture begins with the Yankee stone cutters—Horatio Greenough develops the functional purpose in art—Hiram Powers' "Greek Slave" shocks the public—Hawthorne's analysis of American sculpture—the combination of poet and sculptor in W. W. Story—a native democratic art in the "Rogers Groups"—Jefferson and Emerson support the classical influence in architecture—Hawthorne's love of the Gothic—Poe's theories concerning landscape architecture—Longfellow's comparison of architecture, painting, and sculpture in Michael Angelo—development of the folk songs—the Negro spirituals—Stephen Foster's songs—the folk songs of Spanish and French origin—symphonic compositions based on the works of Irving, Longfellow, Poe, Hawthorne, and Whitman

CHAPTER

PART III

The Later Nineteenth Century

29. THE AGE OF THE MONTHLY MAGAZINE 569
Effects of the Civil War on literary production—Lincoln and other figures given prominence by the war—chief trends in the period 1865-1900—major contributions in literature of the era—accomplishments in wood engraving, painting, sculpture, architecture, and music—popular taste and the book trade—the periodicals
30. DEMOCRACY IN FREE VERSE 598
Whitman's background; his interest in democratic trends throughout the world; his attitude toward democratic progress in America; his career and the history of Leaves of Grass; the arrangement of his poems in the definitive edition; his later prose
31. NEW WINE IN OLD BOTTLES 622
Status of poetry after the Civil War; its epigenous nature—Aldrich, Stedman, Miller, Hayne, Lanier—the vogue of verse in dialect
32. EXPLOITATION OF THE PROVINCES 639
The terms "local-color" and "regional"—the tradition of local-color fiction and the similarity of the movement in America and Europe—Harte and the Far Western authors—the Middle-Western school, Eggleston, Garland—the Southerners, Cable, Harris—New Englanders in the wake of Mrs. Stowe, Sarah Jewett, Mary Wilkins Freeman—decline of interest in genre fiction of the late nineteenth century
33. REALISM FOR THE MIDDLE CLASS 661
Signs of a small trend toward realism—Rebecca Harding Davis—De Forest—Howells; his career; his fiction, verse, and criticism

34.	ESCAPE FROM THE COMMONPLACE	681
	The tradition of respect for European material and the lure of the foreign—the travel-book writers—the expatriates—Crawford, Hearn—Henry James; his vogue, career, fiction, plays, and criticism; his emphasis on consciousness rather than conscience
35.	MIRTH FOR THE MILLION	701
	Humor as escape from the commonplace—the widespread tradition of mirth in print—lowbrow humorists, the journalists, Artemus Ward—highbrow humorists, Warner, Stockton, Bunner, and Bangs—Mark Twain; reasons for interest of intellectuals in Clemens after his death; his career; the insignificance of his philosophical opinions; his better works; his continuing popularity
36.	NEW VOICES IN VERSE	721
	Verse published in the later years of the nineteenth century—light verse—Tabb, Cawein, Hovey, Sill, Woodberry, VanDyke, Lodge, Stickney—the female poets—Emily Dickinson; her life and work; history of publication of her books; nature of her subject matter; unfinished condition of many of her poems
37.	THE FACTS OF LIFE VERSUS PLEASANT READING	737
	Prevailing attitude toward naturalism or advanced realism—romance favored—treatment of sex—Saltus—Frederic, Fuller, Norris—Crane, his career and accomplishments in prose and verse—historical importance—more typical fiction of the late century to be found in the stories of Bierce, Davis, and Townsend
38.	THE CHALLENGE OF SOCIAL PROBLEMS AND OF SCIENCE	763
	Literature of the late century less interested in such problems than is the case at present—examples of interest in sociological and economic subjects—Tourgée, Henry George, Bellamy—attitude toward “socialism”—Science honored but not very influential on belles-lettres—Burroughs, Muir—vogue of Spencer—Fiske—“evolution” a catchword—Weir Mitchell—historians affected by scientific temper—Mahan—Parkman—Adams; his career and interest in science; his fiction, history, and letters
39.	AMUSEMENTS ON THE STAGE	790
	Increase in number of actors and playwrights—taste of public— Ben-Hur and Wallace—star system and “theatrical trust”—copyright situation—Howells as playwright—Harrigan, Howard, Herne, Gillette, Belasco—promise held out by nineties for future developments

PART IV

The Twentieth Century

CHAPTER	PAGE
40. LINGERING URBANITY	813
Transition to a new century—instability of late nineteenth-century culture—W. C. Brownell as upholder of standards—the familiar essay, Agnes Repplier—in the wake of Henry James, Edith Wharton and the novel of social relationships—international contrasts as studied by Anne Douglas Sedgwick—the poetry of E. A. Robinson, characters, philosophy, psychic probings, redemption by art—Lizette Reese and lesser poets—dramatists of the first decade, Thomas, Fitch, Belasco
41. THE CONSCIENCE OF LIBERALISM	825
Mounting disillusionment with the American system—Markham and the poetry of social protest—Moody's poems on political issues—the Muckrakers, Ida Tarbell, Steffens, Baker; their autobiographies—social satire, propaganda, and criticism in the fiction of D. G. Phillips, Upton Sinclair, and Robert Herrick—spiritual revolt in the drama, Moody's plays, Josephine Peabody and poetic drama, Percy MacKaye and the community drama—Randolph Bourne's last stand for the life of reason—poems inspired by the First World War, notably the war songs of G. M. Cohan
42. SPOKESMEN OF THE PLAIN PEOPLE	835
Popular humorists, Dunne, Rogers, George Ade—"O. Henry" in the hearts of the four million—Tarkington and Bromfield as novelists of the average American—Pearl Buck and the Orient—poets of the valley of democracy, Vachel Lindsay and Carl Sandburg
43. RESPECTABILITY DEFIED	845
Decline of the genteel tradition—the glorification of the primitive in Jack London's stories—the submerged world of Theodore Dreiser; the relation of his life to his fiction; his indifference to craftsmanship; his analysis of modern materialism—the inadequacies of city life catalogued by James T. Farrell—Thorstein Veblen and the attack on the complacent leisure class—H. L. Mencken's exploitation of the "booboisie"—the satires of Sinclair Lewis—the hollowness of middle class life as a theme of drama, Zona Gale, Connelly and Kaufman, George Kelly
44. IMPRESSIONISTS AND EXPERIMENTERS	857
Emphasis on new techniques of expression in all the arts—symptoms of decadence—James Gibbons Huneker as the fugelman of esthetic advance—Ezra Pound as the inventor of modernistic poetry; the influence of his experiments—the Imagist movement, featuring Amy Lowell—the independence of John Gould Fletcher—"H. D.,

Imagiste"—Gertrude Stein and her experimental techniques—Conrad Aiken and the new psychology—the early poems of Archibald MacLeish

45. ANALYSTS OF DECAY 868

American literature fails to reflect the rise of the United States to world power—reasons for its defeatist tone—the Spoon River Anthology as a symptom of the time—new attitude toward American village life in the novels of Zona Gale—Sherwood Anderson's probings of psychic grotesques—T. S. Eliot to The Waste Land; his satirical method in verse; the deliberate direction of his career reflected in his critical prose—Robinson Jeffers, the complete misanthrope—naturalism in fiction, Ring Lardner—John Dos Passos—Ernest Hemingway—William Faulkner—Erskine Caldwell—exhaustion of the naturalistic vein

46. LOOPHOLES OF RETREAT 887

Various avenues of escape from contemporary dissatisfactions—romantic hedonists, F. Scott Fitzgerald and the Jazz Age—James Branch Cabell's satirical dream-allegories—Hergesheimer—historical romance, Winston Churchill, James Boyd, Kenneth Roberts, Walter D. Edmonds—Stephen Vincent Benét and national epic—the romance of the pioneer, Conrad Richter—the freedom of open spaces, Stewart Edward White—scientific nature writers, William Beebe, Donald Culross Peattie—lyric armor, Sara Teasdale, Elinor Wylie, Edna Millay—the retreat to authority, Irving Babbitt, Paul Elmer More—the later T. S. Eliot, Ash-Wednesday, philosophical-religious dramas, the Four Quartets

47. IN THE AMERICAN GRAIN 900

Academic contributions to national letters—Robert Frost as a poet in the American tradition; the long curve of his growth from dramatic lyric to reflective poetry; his masques—Willa Cather's search for a more abundant life; her studies of triumphant personalities; analysis of personal disintegration; civilization as the protagonist of her greater novels—Dorothy Canfield Fisher, a sturdy defender of hard-won values—the meaning of America to the immigrant, Rølvaag and Sophus Keith Winther

48. THE RESURGENT SOUTH 914

Gradual recovery of the southern states from the paralysis induced by war and reconstruction—a candid appraisal of rigid conventions in the novels of Ellen Glasgow; strong elements of realism in her social comedy—other regionalists, Elizabeth Madox Roberts, T. S. Stribling, Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings—exploitation of Negro themes by white authors, Du Bose Heyward, Julia Peterkin, Roark Bradford—the contributions of Negro writers to a national culture—regional drama in the work of Paul Green and others—regional-conscious poets and critics, the Fugitive group, John Crowe Ransom,

Allen Tate, and others—the outpourings of Thomas Wolfe—women writers of fiction, Katherine Anne Porter, Eudora Welty, Anne Goodwin Winslow

49. VITALIZERS OF THE DRAMA 927
- The movement begun by Moody continued by Edward Sheldon and Rachel Crothers—contribution of the Little Theatre—the pre-eminence of Eugene O'Neill as an experimental dramatist; his early one-act plays; Beyond the Horizon; tragedies of frustration; symbolic plays; the poetic theme of Lazarus Laughed; Strange Interlude, Mourning Becomes Electra, The Iceman Cometh—adventures out of sight of land, Philip Barry, Thornton Wilder, Maxwell Anderson—some outstanding single plays—favorite themes, the heroism of science, the anatomy of politics—growing maturity of American audiences
50. CROSS-CURRENTS IN AMERICAN THOUGHT 942
- Over-emphasis on analytic thinking in an age of science and resulting unbalance—influence of European thinkers—the Harvard Yard philosophers, Josiah Royce, William James, George Santayana—the instrumentalism of John Dewey—influence of the new physics through Alfred North Whitehead—writers on sociology, law, and government, William Graham Sumner, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., Woodrow Wilson—the scientific historians, James Ford Rhodes, John B. McMaster, Edward P. Cheyney, James Harvey Robinson—the economic determinism of Charles A. Beard—fresh interest in American backgrounds—industrial and military history
51. PROLETARIAN LEANINGS 954
- Interest in the working man previous to the Russian Revolution—John Reed—the effect of the depression period on unstable intellectuals, Max Eastman and others—the case of Granville Hicks—Marxian novels—Proletarian Literature in the United States—the social significance and dubious literary significance of John Steinbeck—left-wing drama, Clifford Odets, Irwin Shaw, and others—the theatre not a happy medium for the expression of Marxist ideology
52. NEW MOVEMENTS IN POETRY 963
- Poetic reactions in a time of cultural disintegration—the stimulus of Freudian psychology, folk-lore, anthropology—the perpetual adolescence of Edward Estlin Cummings—the intellectual lyricism of Marianne Moore, Louise Bogan, and Léonie Adams—Hart Crane soars on wings of wax—masters of the symbol, Wallace Stevens and William Carlos Williams—public speech, the later MacLeish and Kenneth Fearing

53. TWENTIETH-CENTURY FORMS AND PRESSURES 973

Improvement of the economic status of literary workers—effect on the quality of books produced—enlargement of the audience—new commercial outlets for books—increased freedom of expression—the leveling of literature under big business—multiplication of pressure groups—reaction to standardization and commercialism, the little theatre, the little magazine—the new journalism, the column, the profile—public demand for biographies and war books—new media of communication and their availability for literature, the movies, the radio, television—the always ambivalent future

BIBLIOGRAPHIES 985

INDEX 1109