

Contents

|                                                                                                                     |            |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| Acknowledgments . . . . .                                                                                           | vii        |
| Introduction: Why a Fan Fiction Studies Reader Now? . . . . .                                                       | I          |
| Part 1. Fan Fiction as Literature . . . . .                                                                  | 19  |
| 1. HENRY JENKINS, Textual Poachers . . . . .                                                                        | 26         |
| 2. ROBERTA PEARSON, It's Always 1895:Sherlock Holmes in Cyberspace . . . . .                                    | 44         |
| 3. CORNEL SANDVOSS, The Death of the Reader? LiteraryTheory and the Study of Texts in Popular Culture . . . . . | 61         |
| Part 2. Fan Identity and Feminism . . . . .                                                                  | 75  |
| 4. JOANNA RUSS, Pornography by Womenfor Women, with Love . . . . .                                              | 82         |
| 5. PATRICIA FRAZER LAMB AND DIANA L. VEITH,Romantic Myth, Transcendence, and Star Trek Zines . . . . .   | 97         |
| 6. SARA GWENLLIAN JONES, The Sex Livesof Cult Television Characters . . . . .                                   | 116        |
| Part 3. Fan Communities and Affect . . . . .                                                                 | 131 |
| 7. CAMILLE BACON-SMITH, Training New Members . . . . .                                                              | 138        |
| 8. NICHOLAS ABERCROMBIE AND BRIAN LONGHURST,Fans and Enthusiasts . . . . .                                      | 159        |
| 9. CONSTANCE PENLEY, Future Men . . . . .                                                                           | 177        |
| Part 4. Fan Creativity and Performance . . . . .                                                             | 193 |
| 10. KURT LANCASTER, Performing in Babylon—Performing in Everyday Life . . . . .                                 | 198        |

|                                                     |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------|-----|
| II. FRANCESCA COPPA, Writing Bodies in Space: Media |     |
| Fan Fiction as Theatrical Performance. . . . .      | 218 |
| Bibliography. . . . .                               | 239 |
| Permissions . . . . .                               | 253 |
| Index. . . . .                                      | 255 |