

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Series Editors' Preface	xi
Introduction	1
1 The Essential Embodiment Thesis	10
1.0 Introduction	10
1.1 Consciousness In and Through the Body: Sensorimotor Subjectivity	17
1.2 Five Intrinsic Structures of Sensorimotor Subjectivity	25
1.3 Life as the Foundation for Sensorimotor Subjectivity	34
1.4 Essentially Embodied Emotions	43
1.5 Conclusion	47
2 Essentially Embodied, Desire-Based Emotions	50
2.0 Introduction	50
2.1 Cognitive Theories of Emotion	56
2.2 Desire-Based Emotions	61
2.3 Emotional Intentionality	71
2.4 Affective Framing	82
3 Sense of Self, Embodiment, and Desire-Based Emotions	90
3.0 Introduction	90
3.1 Unified Consciousness and the Sense of Self	91
3.2 Immanent Reflexivity	95
3.3 A Necessarily and Completely Neurobiologically Embodied, Egocentric Point of View	101
3.4 Embodied Agency and Desire-Based Emotions	106
3.5 What Does It Mean to Be an Essentially Embodied Self?	114
4 The Role of Emotion in Decision and Moral Evaluation	119
4.0 Introduction: Egocentric, Caring-Contoured Maps	119
4.1 The 'High-Reason' View of Decision-Making and Moral Evaluation	123
4.2 The Crucial Role of Emotion and Affect	126
4.3 The Frame Problem	131
4.4 Conclusion	145
5 Essentially Embodied, Emotive, Enactive Social Cognition	151
5.0 Introduction	151
5.1 Concerns about Theory-Theory and Simulation-Theory	153

5.2 Rethinking Social Cognition: 'Primary Intersubjectivity' and Affective Framing	157
5.3 Context, Social Roles, and Participatory Sense-Making	173
5.4 Conclusion	182
6 Breakdowns in Embodied Emotive Cognition	185
6.0 Introduction	185
6.1 Schizophrenia	187
6.2 Psychopathy	204
6.3 Autism	218
6.4 Conclusion	233
Concluding Remarks	235
Notes	238
Bibliography	243
Index	255