

Contents

|  |           |
|--|-----------|
| Acknowledgments                                   | ix        |
| Introduction: Action, Thought, Pragmatism         | 1  |
| I. Epistemic accounts of action                          | 3         |
| II. Pragmatic accounts of action                         | 5         |
| III. The metaphysics of action                           | 9         |
| IV. Overview of the argument                             | 10        |
| Chapter 1 Neo-Pragmatism and its Critics          | 13 |
| I. Habermas: The criticism of semantic models of meaning | 16        |
| 1. Habermas's pragmatic theory of meaning                | 19        |
| 2. Criticisms of universal pragmatics                    | 22        |
| II. Habermas, Brandom and the 'normative fallacy'        | 24        |
| Conclusions  | 28        |
| Chapter 2 Methodology: Reconstructive Dialectics  | 30 |
| I. What a dialectical analysis is not                    | 31        |
| II. Reconstructive dialectics                            | 32        |
| 1. Reflection as a cognitive act                         | 35        |
| 2. Reconstructive reflection as philosophical analysis   | 41        |
| Conclusions  | 43        |
| Chapter 3 A History of Action Theory              | 44 |
| I. The Aristotelian-scholastic view of action            | 45        |
| 1. Aquinas's psychological typology of action            | 50        |
| 2. Criticisms of the Aristotelian-scholastic model       | 53        |
| II. The modern tradition: Hume and Kant                  | 56        |
| III. The modern tradition: Fichte and Hegel              | 64        |
| Conclusions  | 71        |
| Chapter 4 Defining Actions                        | 73 |
| I. Functionalist views of action and their critics       | 74        |
| II. The emergence of analytic theories of action         | 78        |
| III. The semantic reconstruction of action               | 81        |
| 1. The individuation of actions                          | 83        |
| 2. Actions and causes                                    | 85        |
| 3. Actions and agency                                    | 90        |
| IV. A definition of action                               | 92        |
| Conclusions  | 103       |

|                  |  |            |
|------------------|--|------------|
| Chapter 5 | The Explanation of Action                                 | 105 |
| I.               | Cognitive views of action explanation                            | 109        |
| II.              | Material constraints on cognitive agencies                       | 117        |
| 1.               | The antinomy of agency   | 117        |
| 2.               | First person representation of the material conditions of action | 120        |
| 3.               | Totality, inference, and action                                  | 124        |
|                  | Conclusions  | 127        |
| Chapter 6 | A Material Explanation of Agency                          | 129 |
| I.               | Motion and existence   | 130        |
| II.              | A history of the problem   | 131        |
|                  | Conclusions  | 137        |
| Chapter 7 | Agency and Existence                                      | 139 |
| I.               | Existence, non-existence, and agency                             | 140        |
| II.              | Kant's epistemological critique of existence                     | 142        |
| III.             | Attempts to affirm existential claims                            | 145        |
| IV.              | Existential ontology and non-existence                           | 148        |
| V.               | Existence and agency   | 151        |
| 1.               | Agency and emotions  | 156        |
| 2.               | Reflexive actions  | 157        |
| 3.               | Agency by contact or at a distance?                              | 157        |
| 4.               | Plans and habits   | 159        |
| 5.               | The case of memory   | 160        |
| VI.              | Ethical ramifications  | 161        |
|                  | Conclusions  | 163        |
|                  | Notes   | 165        |
|                  | Bibliography  | 190        |
|                  | Index   | 200        |