

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Contributors	viii
Introduction: End of empire and the English novel Bill Schwarz	1
1 The road to Airstrip One: Anglo-American attitudes in the English fiction of mid-century Patrick Parrinder	38
2 Josephine Tey and her descendants: conservative modernity and the female crime novel Cora Kaplan	53
3 Colonial fiction for liberal readers: John Masters and the Savage family saga Richard Steadman-Jones	74
4 The entropy of Englishness: reading empire's absence in the novels of William Golding Rachael Gilmour	92
5 The empire of romance: love in a postcolonial climate Deborah Philips	114
6 Passage from Kinjanja to Pimlico: William Boyd's comedy of imperial decline Michael L. Ross	134
7 Unlearning empire: Penelope Lively's Moon Tiger Huw Marsh	152

8	'I am not the British Isles on two legs': travel fiction and travelling fiction from D.H. Lawrence to Tim Parks Suzanne Hobson	166
9	Queer histories and postcolonial intimacies in Alan Hollinghurst's The Line of Beauty Sarah Brophy	184
10	The return of the native: Pat Barker, David Peace and the regional novel after empire James Procter	203
11	Saturday's Enlightenment David Alderson	218
	Afterword: The English novel and the world Elleke Boehmer	238