

Contents

Preface to the English Edition	ix
Translator's Note	xi
Introduction	xiii

I GERMAN UNITY: THE FRAMEWORK

1 The Political Framework	3
1.1 The dynamics of the unification process, and the securing of unity on the international front	3
1.1.1 The Federal Republic and the crisis in the GDR up to the end of the Modrow government	3
1.1.2 The emergence of a new party system in the GDR and the Volkskammer elections of 18 March 1990	18
1.1.3 The effect of unification and the approaching Bundestag elections on German politics and international relations	21
1.1.4 German unity within the framework of international relations and domestic politics	34
1.2 Government and opposition, 1991–1994	41
1.2.1 The coalition agreement and the announcement of the government's programme	41
1.2.2 The struggle for control of the Bundesrat	45
1.2.3 Changes in the party system and the Bundestag elections of 16 October 1994	47
2 German Unity and Social Policy: The Legal Framework	54
2.1 The end of the socialist constitution of the GDR	58
2.2 The debate over the enshrining of basic social rights in the constitution	60
2.3 Social policy and problems arising from unity: decisions by the Federal Constitutional Court and the employment and social courts	62
2.4 The European dimension of social policy, and judgements by the European Court of Justice	66
3 The German Economy and the Process of Unification	69
3.1 Changes in the economic system and in the legislation and institutions governing social policy	69
3.2 The Europeanization of economic and financial policy, and the effects of growing globalization	72

3.3	Burdens imposed on the welfare state by the transformation of the east German economy	74
3.3.1	The weaknesses of the GDR economy	74
3.3.2	The GDR's advantages and disadvantages in the transformation process: a comparison with the states of eastern central Europe	76
3.3.3	The collapse of trade with eastern Europe and the Soviet Union; problems of investment arising from the resolution of property questions	78
3.3.4	The crisis in the east German economy and the development of the labour market	83
3.3.5	Economic development and economic structures	86
3.3.6	Transfer payments to east Germany and their consequences	91
3.4	Comparative living standards in east and west Germany	96
3.5	Changes in the world of work	99
4	The Social Structure and Expectations from Social Policy	102
4.1	Demographic change and its consequences	102
4.2	Social stratification in west and east Germany	109
4.3	Zeitgeist and social policy in west and east Germany, as reflected in opinion surveys	111
II THE CREATION OF THE SOCIAL UNION
5	The Central Features of the Social Union: The Legislation and Institutions Governing Social Policy in the Federal Republic and the GDR Compared	119
6	The Social Policy of the Modrow Government	131
6.1	The crisis in the health system	131
6.2	Employment policy and the administrative system for employment	134
6.3	Co-determination in enterprises and firms	137
6.4	The FDGB and the Trade Union Law	139
6.5	The Social Charter	141
7	The State Treaty on Monetary, Economic, and Social Union	144
7.1	First contacts between the Labour Ministries of the Federal Republic and the GDR after the fall of the Berlin Wall	144
7.2	The drafting of the State Treaty	147
7.3	The negotiations with the GDR	157
7.4	The ratification of the State Treaty	165
8	The Social Legislation of the de Maizière Government	169
8.1	Employment law and health and safety legislation	170
8.2	The GDR Employment Promotion Law	172

8.3	The new social security system	175
8.4	The start of the reorganization of the health service and of the establishment of a multipartite system of health insurance	181
9	The Unification Treaty	184
9.1	The course of the negotiations and the principal problems	184
9.2	Social policy in the Unification Treaty	185
9.2.1	Employment law and health and safety regulation	186
9.2.2	Agreements on protection measures against rationalization	189
9.2.3	Early retirement, pre-pension transitional benefit, and labour market policy	191
9.2.4	Pensions insurance	192
9.2.5	Social provision for war victims	194
9.2.6	Health insurance and health care	194
9.2.7	Policy on the family and women	197
9.3	The ratification of the Unification Treaty	199
10	The Social Policy Actors and the Unification Process	202
10.1	The dominant role of the executive	202
10.2	The Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Order	204
10.3	The GDR's delegation to the negotiations	206
10.4	The roles of the Bundestag, the coalition parties, and the Social Democratic opposition	210
10.5	The Bundesländer	216
10.6	The role of the major social forces and their organizations	221
	German Unification and Social Policy: Conclusions	227

III CHANGES TO THE GERMAN WELFARE STATE AFTER GERMAN UNIFICATION, 1990–1994

11	The Build-up of Welfare-State Institutions and Providers in the New Bundesländer	235
11.1	The administrative system for employment, and employment promotion policy	236
11.2	Problems in the extension of Federal German employment law to the east	238
11.3	The development of a new system of industrial relations	242
11.4	Social insurance	249
11.4.1	The development and further alignment of pensions insurance in the east	249
11.4.2	Accident insurance	257
11.4.3	Health insurance and the health system	258
11.4.4	The introduction of social care insurance	261
11.5	The build-up of support for war victims	266

11.6	Support for the disabled	268
11.7	The build-up of income support and of the Independent Welfare Associations	270
11.8	The creation of separate jurisdictions in employment law and social law	273
11.9	Conclusions	276
12	The Debates on Germany's Economic Position and on the Problems in Financial and Social Policy Resulting from German Unity	278
12.1	The competitiveness of the German economy	278
12.2	The Federal Consolidation Programme	281
12.3	The partial financing of German unity through social insurance	285
12.4	Social policy, budgetary consolidation, and the effort to maintain Germany's economic standing, 1993/1994	289
13	Social Policy and its Actors, 1991–1994	296
13.1	The framework	296
13.2	The Federal Chancellery and the coordination of policy	297
13.3	Norbert Blüm and the social policy coalition	299
13.4	The coordination of social policy within the governing coalition	300
13.5	The Bundestag, the Bundesrat, and the Social Democratic opposition	301
13.6	Trade unions and employers' associations	304
13.7	Summary	305
	Concluding Reflections	307
1	German social policy in the context of German unification and the attempt to maintain Germany's economic standing, 1989–1994: general outline, actors, and problems	307
2	The effects of unification on the population in the east	311
3	The German welfare state: international comparisons	314
4	Conclusions and prospects	319
	Notes	323
	Sources and Bibliography	421
1	Unpublished (archival) sources	421
2	Published sources and bibliography	422
3	Interviews	450
	Glossary of Terms and Abbreviations	451
	The Principal Actors in the Process of German Unification	461
	Index	471