PART I: RECURRENT COSMIC CYCLES

Chapter I

Early Ideas of Time-Cycles: Serpent, Sun and Mythopoeic Thought	1
--	---

Chapter II

Dawn of Cyclical Concepts of Time in Mesopotamia	10
The annual cycle and its cosmic significance. The Tablets of Destiny: theocratic determination of history for a one-year period as the significance of New Year's Day. Development of the idea of the Macrocosmic Year, the Great Year of the universe. Summary.

Chapter III

Development of the Idea of Recurrent Cosmic Cycles in Indian Thought	35
Cyclical symbolism of the cosmic Dance of Shiva. Cyclical Great Years of the cosmos: the Kalpa and its four Yugas. The space-time cyclical symbolism in architecture (continued in chapter VI). The cyclical symbolism of the Fire-altar ritual. The Great Horse Sacrifice and the cyclical year. Summary: significance of the cyclical symbolisms studied in this chapter, but see chapter VII for higher interpretations in the light of the great yogic philosophies.

Chapter IV

Development of the Cyclical Pattern of History in India: Buddhism	62
The Buddhist pattern of recurrent cosmic cycles and its symbolic significance. Chapters VI and VII continue Buddhist cyclical philosophies of the yogic Mahayana schools of thought.

Chapter V

Development of the Cyclical Pattern in India: Jainism	69
The pattern of cosmic cycles. The significance of cosmic cycles in relation to human goals.

Chapter VI

Cyclical Time and the Philosophy of the Mandala 76

(This theme is continued in Chapter VIII). The Tibetan mandala in relation to the cyclical return or reintegration of man with the macrocosmic reality. Borobudur, monumental mandala in stone: its space-time symbolism of the cyclical return. Summary of the philosophical significance of mandala symbolism in relation to the meaning of human history (this theme is continued—with comments upon Jung's approach to the psychological and philosophical meaning of mandala symbolism—in the following chapter).

Chapter VII

Maya, Yoga, and Cyclical Patterns of Time in Eastern yogic philosophies: Sankhya-yoga, Vedanta, Later Taoism and Zen Buddhism. 111

Sankhya-yoga and the cycle of the return. Advaita Vedanta, maya, cosmic cycles and the yogic cyclical return mandala. Cyclical return to the Center (the Tao) in a Taoist form of Chinese yoga: The Secret of the Golden Flower. Zen Buddhism: cyclical return and the identity of samsara and nirvana. Jung's comments on the significance of mandala symbolism, its philosophy and psychology. Summary: yogic experience, maya and cyclical time-symbolism.

Chapter VIII

Organismic Cyclical Patterns of History in Chinese Thought 159

Yin-yang, the Five Elements and the Son of Heaven. Tung Chung-shu's organic cyclical views of history: background in the ideology of Tsou Yen and the Yin and Yang and Five Elements School. Tung's organic cycles: the Five Elements, the Cycle of the Seasons, Government and Virtue: the Three Sequences and other minor cyclical sequences. Shao Yung's theory of the Great Year of the Cosmos. Chinese thought and the West.

Chapter IX

Mythical Cyclical Time Patterns in Greek and Roman Thought 196

Hesiod's Five Ages. Ovid's Metamorphoses and the Ages. Virgil's Messianic Eclogue and world cycles.

Chapter X

Greek Naturalism Applied to Cosmic Cycles 204

Early naturalistic thought. The Pythagoreans and the cyclic Great Year of the cosmos. Empedocles. Cosmic and culture cycles in Plato's thought. Cycles in Aristotle's philosophy of nature and culture. Stoic cycles; the ecpyrosis. Epicurean cyclic views. Firmicus: the Sothic cycle, the Five Planets and Five Ages. Ancient and modern naturalism and cosmic cycles.

PART II: ONE-GRAND-CYCLE PATTERNS OF COSMIC AND HUMAN HISTORY

Chapter I

- Background of one-grand-cycle patterns: From Eden to Eden: Idea of the Golden Age* 233
- Idea of the Golden Age in ancient Egypt. The Golden Age and the Wonder Child in Hebrew thought. Zoroastrian beliefs about the cycle of world history and its goal: a "new heaven and a new earth."

Chapter II

- Hebrew-Christian One-Cycle Views: Cycle of the Return to Paradise: the Coming Kingdom of God* 244
- The four-epoch periodization of history in Daniel. Apocalyptic eschatology of Daniel and its significance. Apocalyptic literature and the supernatural Messiah. New Testament apocalyptic thought.

Chapter III

- St. Augustine's One-Grand-Cycle: The Great Week of the World: The Mandala of Man's Journey from God to God or from the Earthly to the Heavenly Paradise* 251
- The Fall and the Seven Epochs of History: the Great Week of the World. The Eighth Eternal Epoch in Paradise. Augustine and Toynbee.

Chapter IV

- The One-Grand-Cycle in Moslem Thought* 256
- The apocalyptic historical cycle described in the Koran. Avicenna and al-Ghazzali in relation to Koranic apocalyptic thought. The historical cycle and the Neoplatonism of the Sufis' mandala-of-the-return cycle. The Isma'ili theory of the cycle of cosmic and human history. Transition to "secular" one-cycle patterns: influence of Augustine's apocalyptic one-cycle pattern upon subsequent Western thought.

Chapter V

The Sacred-Secular Synthesis in Hegel's Cyclical Pattern of History and its Marxian Materialistic Version 277

Influence of the apocalyptic-providential cyclical views upon modern secular historical thought. Condorcet and the influence of the Idea of Progress upon modern ideas of history. The dialectical cycle of history in Hegel's thought: alienation and return. The Marxian materialistic version of the dialectical cycle. Reconciliation of spiritual and materialistic interpretations of the cycle and its goal: Freedom.

Chapter VI

Contemporary Indian One-Cycle Patterns of History: Sri Aurobindo 299

The cycle of the Involution and the Evolution of the Infinite. The goal of history: the advent of the Gnostic Being. Aurobindo's "spiritual socialism" and Marxism.

Chapter VII

Contemporary Indian One-Cycle Patterns: Professor Radhakrishnan's Philosophy of History 306

The involution-evolution cycle. The goal of history: transmutation of Intellect into Spirit. Necessity for an end of this world cycle. Refutation of charges of escapism directed against Indian thought. Similarities between Radhakrishnan's and the Christian and Hegelian theories of history.

PART III: CULTURE CYCLES: TWENTIETH CENTURY VIEWS

Chapter I

Great Forerunners of Twentieth Century Culture-Cycle Theories: Ibn Khaldun and Vico.

Section I: Ibn Khaldun 322

Ibn Khaldun. Group feeling and culture integration. Religion as the foundation for a large civilization. The stages in the rise and fall cycle-pattern of dynasties and civilizations. The ruin of states: the evils of sedentary culture.

Section 2: Vico. 337

History as a sociological science. Similarity with Ibn Khaldun's sociological approach to history. The pattern of the culture cycle: the major epochs. Recurrence of the pattern in Western culture. Providence and history.

Chapter II

Oswald Spengler's Theory of Culture Cycles: The Cycle of the Macrocosmic Organism 353

The Prime Symbol of the culture-organism. Time and culture-forms. Space and culture-forms. Art as the expression of the Grand Style of a culture. Cycle of the Grand Style in art. Society and the cycle: nobility, priesthood, bourgeoisie and the "mass." Science, mathematics, logic in relation to the culture style.

Chapter III

The Cyclical Pattern of Sorokin's Cultural Dynamics 379

The cyclic culture-pattern: Ideational-idealistic-sensate. The cyclic pattern in the fine arts; in the system of truth; in ethics and law; in social relationships. Dawn of a new culture-epoch: era of Creative Altruism and the Supra-conscious level of human life. Meeting of East and West in Sorokin's prognosis of the dawning era of history. Summary of Sorokin's culture-cycle pattern of history.

Chapter IV

Cyclical Form of the Culture-Pattern in Toynbee's Philosophy of History: the Pattern of the Rise and Fall of the Great Civilizations 403

The cycle-pattern of every great culture: First stage of the Cycle, Challenge and Response; Second stage of the cycle, the Growth of civilizations and the significance of growth in the physiognomy of a culture; Third Stage, the Breakdown of civilizations; Fourth Stage, the Disintegration of civilizations. The significance of religion in Toynbee's philosophy of history: the churches "a higher species of society." Progress in human history lies in the sphere of religion with spiritual self-realization as the goal. Summary: the goal and meaning of total human history and similarities with Oriental thought.

CONCLUSION: SIGNIFICANCE OF THIS STUDY 456

Is the cyclic patterning of history defensible? Eastern and Western cyclical patterns compared: similarity in goals and meanings of history. Cosmic cycles and contemporary science. Prognostications: the next epoch in history.
