

Setting the Standards

Institutions, Networks and Communities of National Historiography

Edited by

Ilaria Porciani

Professor of Modern and Contemporary History and the History of Historiography, University of Bologna

and

Jo Tollebeek

Professor of Cultural History, University of Leuven

EUROPEAN SCIENCE FOUNDATION
SETTING SCIENCE AGENDAS FOR EUROPE

palgrave
macmillan

Contents

List of Tables and Figures	x
Notes on Contributors	xi

Introduction

1 Institutions, Networks and Communities in a European Perspective	3
Jo Tollebeek and Ilaria Porciani
An age of history	5
Productive history	7
Professional history	10
Continuity and discontinuity	15
Historiographical generations	20
A broader scope	21

Part I

2 ‘Something More than a Storage Warehouse’: The Creation of National Archives	29
Tom Verschaffel
Movement	31
Centralisation	33
Publicity	34
Towards history	35
Professionalisation	37
Autonomy and bricks	39
In history	41
3 Monumental Undertakings: Source Publications for the Nation	47
Daniela Saxer
New impulses	48
Great enterprises	51
Doing national history by editing	54
Media, techniques and infrastructures	57
Diversification and consolidation	60
4 Scholarly Communication with a Political Impetus: National Historical Journals	70
Claus Møller Jørgensen
In a professional context	72

In a political context	77
Epilogue: After the Second World War	80
5 The Dictionary Is Dead, Long Live the Dictionary! Biographical Collections in National Contexts	89
Marcello Verga
‘Signification de ces mots: Biographie Nationale ’	90
A golden age	92
Workshops	97
The dictionary is still alive	100
6 Exegi Monumentum: The Great Syntheses of National History	105
Jo Tollebeek
The Romantic generation	106
The high point: Around 1900	108
For science and one’s country	113
Many readers	115
Prestigious ventures	119
A long history	123
7 Nations on Display: History Museums in Europe	130
Ilaria Porciani
French prologue: A house for the nation’s history	130
‘Zooming out’	132
At the origin: The nation	134
Associations: From regions to empires	137
An earlier home for history: From Berlin to Bonn and back	141
Towards the nation once more	143
Part II
8 In the Provinces: Local and Regional Learned Societies	153
Jean-Pierre Chaline
An intellectual elite	154
The rise of national history	156
Genuine diversity	158
9 Wishful Thinking: Academic Competitions in National History	165
Monika Baár
The spirit of the age	166
Language, unity and distinctiveness	168
A plurality of histories	171
Educating the nation, disseminating the results	174
Epilogue	177

10	'A Daily Working Group Together in One House': Research Institutes at the National Academies of Sciences in East Central Europe	183
	Frank Hadler and Attila Pók
	Background and precursors	185
	Initial environment and first directors	186
	Structure, priorities and large-scale projects	188
	The position of the institutes at home	191
	In the 'ecumenical community of historians'	193
	Deep structural similarities?	194
11	Serving the Profession: National Associations of Historians	202
	Gabriele Lingelbach and Michael Vössing
	The German Historikerverband: An example	202
	Tasks and means	205
	Types of development: Active versus inactive national associations	213
	Types of development: Professionalisation	216
12	Places of Innovation and Exchange: The Extra-University Institutions for Historical Research	224
	Emmanuelle Picard and Gabriele Lingelbach
	Scientific innovation, crucial topics	225
	An institutional 'stopgap'	228
	Different careers?	231
	An active state	233
	By way of conclusion	237
13	Militancy and Pluralism: Party and Church Institutes of Contemporary History in Western Europe since 1945	240
	Lutz Raphael
	History and engagement	240
	Pioneering institutions	241
	The legacy of the Second World War	244
	La via italiana	245
	France: politique d'abord	249
	The Federal Republic of Germany: The university ties	253
	A national pluralism in Belgium	258
	Conclusions	260
14	Wider Connections: International Networks among European Historians	266
	Jan Eivind Myhre
	The primacy of the national	267
	Towards internationalisation	268
	The International Historical Congresses	270

The International Committee of Historical Sciences:
Its organisations and committees	272
The proliferation of sub-disciplines	275
International history institutes	278
History regions	280
The role of languages	281
The American connection	283

Part III

15 A New Community of Scholars: The University Professors at Work	291
Mauro Moretti
The professor's home	291
The organisation of the 'profession'	294
Method and ethos	300
Provisional conclusion: A long decline?	307
16 A Truculent Revenge: The Clergy and the Writing of National History	313
Irène Herrmann and Franziska Metzger
The presence of the clergy	314
Reactive activism	319
Conclusion	323
17 Bulwark of Traditions: The European Nobility and Regional and National Historiography in the Nineteenth Century	330
Gabriele B. Clemens
Enthusiasts of antiquarian societies, academies and historical commissions	332
Collectors and managers of academic projects	335
Archivists and librarians	337
Authors of regional and national histories	340
Masters in the field of heraldry	344
The good and exemplary noble lord	345
18 Popular Writers: Women Historians, the Academic Community and National History Writing	351
Mary O'Dowd
A tiny minority	351
An unacknowledged contribution	356
Writers of popular history	357
Missing academic support	360
Conclusion	366

19 Striving for Visibility: Nationalists in Multinational Empires and States	372
Ernst Bruckmüller, Neil Evans and Lluís Roura y Aulinas
Two 'non-historical' nations: Slovenes and Slovaks	374
Counterweights to an elephant: Scotland and Wales	378
Repression and interdiction before the new blooming season: Catalonia	384
Conclusion	388
20 Living in the Past: Historians in Exile	394
Monika Mandelíčková and Idesbald Goddeeris
The writer: Poles in the nineteenth century	395
The Professor: Germans in the inter-war period	399
The Institute: Eastern Europeans in the Cold War	404
Conclusion	408
Concluding Remarks
21 Historians and the Web	415
Ilaria Porciani and Jo Tollebeek
Uncertainty, loss of prestige and a changing public role	415
The digital turn	418
Index	423