

Narrating Friendship and the British Novel, 1760–1830

Katrin Berndt

Contents

| | |
|---|-----|
| Acknowledgements | vii |
| Introduction | 1 |
| PART I | |
| The Virtuousness of Conventions: Friendship and the Ethics of Fiction | 37 |
| 1 Friendship Values, Friendship Virtues in Frances Brooke's The History of Lady Julia Mandeville (1763) | 47 |
| 2 Mary Shelley's Frankenstein (1818) and the Narcissistic Impotence of Romantic Friendship | 68 |
| PART II | |
| Public or Private? Friendship and the Novel Sphere in Utopian and Sentimental Writing | 91 |
| 3 A Utopian Conjunction? Philanthropic Design and Particular Friendship in Sarah Scott's Millenium Hall (1762) | 97 |
| 4 Helen Maria Williams's Julia (1790) and the Paradigm of Active Sensibility in the Sentimental Novel | 120 |
| PART III | |
| A Question of Perspective and Character: Friendship and Narrative Situation | 139 |
| 5 'Excite me to Virtue': Friendship as Reason and Purpose in Charlotte Lennox's Euphemia (1790) | 147 |

| | | |
|---|--|-----|
| 6 | The Perceptive Pluralism of Friendship in Sir Walter Scott's Redgauntlet (1824) | 161 |
|---|--|-----|

PART IV

| | | |
|--|---|------------|
| | The Progress of the Plot: Epistemologies of Friendly Interventions | 183 |
|--|---|------------|

| | | |
|---|--|-----|
| 7 | Not False, but Wrong? Friendly Interventions in Jane Austen's Persuasion (1818) | 191 |
|---|--|-----|

| | | |
|---|---|-----|
| 8 | Friendship, Truth, and the Generosity of Heart in Maria Edgeworth's Helen (1834) | 210 |
|---|---|-----|

| | | |
|--|--|-----|
| | Conclusion: Friendship and the Novel Genre | 231 |
|--|--|-----|

| | | |
|--|---------------------|-----|
| | Bibliography | 239 |
|--|---------------------|-----|

| | | |
|--|--------------|-----|
| | Index | 268 |
|--|--------------|-----|