CHAPTER I.

THE FUNDAMENTAL CHARACTERISTICS OF JUDAISM.

I.	Legalism—
	Growth of this conception	13
	In contrast to the prophets post-exilic Judaism—
	1. Magnified the ceremonial at the expense of the ethical	17
	2. Failed to distinguish between great moral duties and little points of petty casuistry	17
	3. Assumed a predominantly negative character	18
	4. Was characterised by a narrow particularism	19
	5. Fostered an atmosphere of unreality	20
II.	Religious Fellowship	21
	1. Growth of the ecclesiastical tendency, and formation of a new fellowship unconnected with the national life. Judaism a “theocracy”	21
	2. The synagogue. Its functions as church and school in one ; its value for the religious life of Judaism	25
	3. Principal points of Judaistic piety: prayer, fasting, and almsgiving	28
	4. Although Judaism had become a religious fellowship limited to no single country, it failed to detach itself from the national life	30
III.	Individualism	30
	1. Judaism an attempt to translate the theocratic conceptions of the prophets into terms of individual religion	31

	PAGE
2. Drift of Judaism towards individualism part of a world-wide movement	31
Private worship of the individual still more essential to Judaism than the public ritual	33
3. Forces in Judaism tending to counteract the centrifugal tendencies of individualism	34
4. Development of ethical feeling during this age	35
5. Religious individualism awakened through the synagogue and reflected in the later portions of the Psalter	36
6. In the later Judaism religious individualism but imperfectly realised	38
IV. Conservatism	38
1. This feature explains the lack of originality and of great religious personalities in this period	38
2. Loyal adherence of the Jews to the religion of their fathers as attested by—
(1) their attitude of exclusiveness towards outsiders	39
(2) the formation of the Old Testament canon	41
V. Syncretism	43
1. Judaism not allowed to develop without an admixture of foreign elements	43
2. Babylonian influence: affected Judaism only in secondary points	44
3. Persian influence more vital	45
Its extent cannot be pronounced upon in view of—
(1) the uncertain date of many ideas in the Zend-Avesta	46
(2) the fact that it can scarcely have been a pure form of the Persian religion which the Jews became acquainted with in Babylon	46
It was most marked, however, in the spheres of mythology, cosmology, angelology, and eschatology	48
4. Greek influence. Here the facts more definitely ascertained. Hellenism affected but slightly the development of religious thought, but told powerfully upon life and manners, as well as upon language and literature	50
5. The substitution of the dominion of the Seleucidæ for that of the Ptolemies meant simply a transference from one form of Hellenistic rule to another	51
6. On the accession of Antiochus IV. Epiphanes a bold attempt was made to hellenise Jewish life on its religious side also	54

CHAPTER II.

PALESTINIAN JUDAISM: PRE-MACCABÆAN.

	PAGE
I. The Land and the People	57
1. The Exile a forward movement in Israelitish religion . . .	58
2. Changed character of the restored community	59
3. Interest attaching to this age of Jewish history as contain- ing the key to the proper understanding of the New Testament	59
4. The Jews bound to Palestine by a religious tie	60
5. Judaism, however, grew up as a new thing on the ancient soil, and had to be organised upon a non-political basis . .	61
6. It represented an attempt to realise Ezekiel's vision of a new theocracy	62
7. The new impetus given by the Maccabæan revolt	63
II. The two forms assumed by Jewish legalism—priestly and scribal .	63
1. Priestly. The restoration of the cultus—
(1) Improved the status of the priesthood, and raised the high priest as head of the hierarchy to a position of unique dignity and influence	64
(2) Led to a sharp distinction between Aaronic priests and Levites	66
(3) Based on the Law-book introduced by Ezra	66
(4) Not a reversion to heathen practices condemned by the prophets: the sacred festivals transformed into commemorative institutions of supernatural religion	66
(5) Yet popular piety growingly detached from the Temple and its services	67
2. Scribal. Rise of the scribes	68
(1) A new professional class occupying themselves with the scientific study and interpretation of the Law	68
(2) Scribal activity as seen in Halacha and Haggada	68
(3) The scribes were the jurists, academic teachers, and judges of their time; an organised guild with representatives in every locality; held in universal esteem	68
(4) Contrast between their teaching and that of Jesus	71
(5) That even under the artificial system of the scribes true piety was not wholly extinguished, is apparent from many psalms written between the Exile and the Maccabæan revolt. Ac-

	PAGE
cording to these the essence of piety consists in (a) the fear of God, (b) trust, (c) humility; and it finds expression in (a) observance of the Law, (b) worship, (c) witness-bearing. Jewish piety, however, was made a matter of party strife, and tended to become more and more external	72-78
III. The Wisdom Movement	79
1. Theory that it was confined to a certain period of Jewish history	80
2. Its cosmopolitan aspect	81
3. Difference between the standpoint of the Hebrew sage and that of the Greek philosopher	82
4. Divine and human aspects of the Wisdom as presented in the Old Testament	82
5. Characteristics of the Wisdom literature	83
6. The conception of the hypostasis of Wisdom	84
7. Doctrine of rewards and punishments in the Wisdom literature	86
8. Main problem dealt with—the reconciliation of the facts of experience with the government of the world by a righteous God	87
9. Growth of the Wisdom into an eschatology: this development less pronounced in Palestinian than in Hellenistic Judaism	91

CHAPTER III.

THE MACCABÆAN STRUGGLE.

I. The Hasidim and the Hellenists	95
1. Reaction against Hellenism: organisation of the party of the Hasidim in defence of the Law	96
2. Complications due to the impecuniosity of the Seleucid court and the intrigues of unscrupulous Jews in Jerusalem	96
II. Antiochus IV. Epiphanes	97
1. His character and public policy	98
2. Notwithstanding progress of Greek party under his patronage, it became a prey to the selfish motives of its adherents	101

Contents

	PAGE
3. Slaughter of inhabitants of Jerusalem on return of Antiochus from his Egyptian campaign of B.C. 170	101
4. The city subsequently laid waste by his general Apollonius; placing of a Syrian garrison in the citadel (Akra), and issue of an edict for suppression of Judaism and institution of heathen rites; an idol altar ("the abomination of desolation") set up in the Temple in December, B.C. 168	102
5. Persecution of "the pious," who consoled themselves with the thought of the resurrection as enshrined in Book of Daniel	103
III. Revolt led by Mattathias and his sons in alliance with the Hasidim	105
1. Death of Mattathias in B.C. 166, and assumption of leadership by Judas Maccabæus	106
2. Personality of Judas: early triumphs over Syrian generals	106
3. Restoration of Temple worship, and institution of Feast of the Dedication	108
4. Victories of Maccabees over surrounding heathen tribes	109
5. Death of Antiochus Epiphanes in B.C. 164, and prosecution of the war by Lysias, guardian of Antiochus v. Eupator	110
6. Defeat of Judas at Beth-zacharias, and unexpected concession of religious liberty to the Jews	110
IV. Continuation of the strife between the rival parties in Judæa	111
1. Secession from the Maccabees of the Hasidim on the appointment of Alcimus, an Aaronic high priest	112
2. Defeat of the Syrian general Nicanor by Judas at Adasa in B.C. 161	112
3. Judas defeated and slain at Elasa: character of Judas	113
V. Jonathan chosen successor to Judas	115
1. In his hands the struggle became purely one for the supremacy of the Hasmonæan house	116
2. His appointment as high priest by Alexander Balas in B.C. 153, followed by the bestowal of civil and military honours as well	118
3. Jonathan secures the favour of Demetrius II., but owing to the perfidy of this monarch, makes common cause with his rival Tryphon	120
4. Tryphon, distrustful of Jonathan's military campaigns, decoys the Maccabee into Ptolemais, and takes him prisoner	121
VI. Simon called to the front	122
1. Checkmates Tryphon, who avenges himself by putting Jonathan to death (B.C. 143)	123

	PAGE
2. Political independence of Judæa achieved (B.C. 143-142)	123
3. Simon's peaceful administration	124
4. Offices of high priest, military commander, and ethnarch made hereditary in Simon's family	126
5. Murder of Simon and two of his sons by Ptolemy, his son-in-law, B.C. 135	127
6. Character of Simon as priest, soldier, and statesman	127
VII. Significance of Maccabæan movement for post-exilic Judaism	128
VIII. The question regarding Maccabæan psalms	129

CHAPTER IV.

PALESTINIAN JUDAISM: POST-MACCABÆAN.

I. The rival parties of the Pharisees and Sadducees	137
1. The Pharisees—
(1) The party of the scribes : their religious standpoint that of orthodox Judaism	137
(2) Virtually identical with the Ḥasīdīm : in no sense a political party	140
(3) As opponents of the Hasmonæan dynasty became formally antagonistic to the Sadducees, who supported the king	142
(4) From being the oppressed, had become the ruling party in Israel	143
(5) Relation of scribes and Pharisees to the Sanhedrin	144
(6) Tendency to identify piety with culture	147
(7) Real character of Pharisaic development illustrated by its opposition to (a) the Sadducees, (b) the Am-ḥdāres	149
2. The Sadducees—
(1) Historical origin of the party	149
(2) Represented the old priestly aristocracy, and became the functionaries and champions of the new State, which was the fruit of the Macca- bæan struggle	151
(3) The name Sadducee	151
(4) Genius of Sadduceeism distinctly political	152
(5) Doctrinal position of the Sadducees	153

	PAGE
II. Relations of Pharisees and Sadducees as illustrated by the external history	153
1. Hyrcanus breaks off from the Pharisees and becomes a Sadducee	142
2. Civil war between the Pharisaic party and Alexander Jannæus	158
3. Moral ascendancy of the Pharisees under Alexandra	160
4. Abdication of Alexandra's elder son Hyrcanus II. in favour of her younger son Aristobulus	162
5. Sinister influence of the Idumæan Antipater in fomenting strife between the rival princes	163
III. Downfall of the Hasmonæan, and rise of the Herodian, dynasty	164
1. Intervention of Rome : Pharisaic deputation to Pompey	165
2. Siege of Jerusalem by the Romans	166
3. Hyrcanus II. reinstated as high priest, but without the title of king	167
IV. Position of the Jews in general, and of the Pharisees and Sadducees in particular, during the first quarter of a century of Roman supremacy	168
1. Revival of patriotic feeling, and genesis of the idea of a political Messiah	168
2. Roman intervention in some respects not unwelcome to the Pharisees, but detrimental to the interests of the Sadducees	169
3. "Aristocracies" of Gabinius constituted, but cancelled at the instance of Antipater	170
4. Futile attempts under Sadducean auspices to restore Hasmonæan rule	170
5. Antipater made procurator of Judæa, etc.	171
6. Herod's defiance of the Sanhedrin: his investiture with political authority	172
7. Antigonus Mattathias set up as king by the Parthians: flight of Herod to Rome	174
8. Downfall of Antigonus and the Sadducees: with the help of the Romans Herod captures Jerusalem and becomes King of Judæa (B.C. 37)	175

CHAPTER V.

THE HERODIAN AGE.

I. Herod's failure to conciliate Jewish hatred of the Idumæan usurpers, in spite of his understanding with the Pharisees and consolidation of his power	181
---	-----

	PAGE
II. Growing decadence of the Sadducees and ascendancy of Pharisaism	189
1. Rival schools of Hillel and Shammai	189
2. Codification of oral tradition, and subordination of Scripture thereto	191
3. Antagonism of the Pharisees to the Am-häarez	193
(1) In the Old Testament the term simply designates the populace as distinguished from the nobility	193
(2) It now came to denote the people from whom the Pharisees separated themselves, and whom they despised as an uneducated mob	193
(3) Cleavage became specially acute after the destruction of Jerusalem	194
4. The fanatical party of the Zealots: dissatisfied Pharisees who were eager to realise the Messianic hope by an appeal to the sword	195
5. The Herodian princes Archelaus, Antipas, and Philip	196
6. Temporary improvement in the position of the Sadducees under direct Roman rule	197
7. Jewish insurrection and destruction of Jerusalem by Titus	201
8. Subsequent undisputed ascendancy of the Pharisees: henceforth Judaism nothing but a religion, yet failed to free itself from national limitations	201
III. The Essenes	203
1. An esoteric brotherhood or monastic order: lived a communistic life in special quarters of their own: their peculiar manners and customs	204
2. Religious ideas of the Essenes essentially Jewish, but with certain decided exceptions or modifications	207
3. Foreign influences (Zoroastrian and Pythagorean) at work in the development of the religious society of the Essenes	211
4. No real kinship between Essenism and the religion of Jesus	213
5. Organised Essenism did not survive the destruction of Jerusalem, although its influence told upon Gnostic sects east of the Jordan	214
6. The precursors of Christian monasticism	215

CHAPTER VI.

THE APOCALYPTIC MOVEMENT AND LITERATURE.

PART I.

The name apocalyptic and what it covers	219
Jewish apocalypse a product of the new national sentiment called forth by the Maccabæan struggle	220

	PAGE
I. The apocalyptic writings—
1. The Book of Daniel	220
2. The Book of Enoch (I Enoch, Ethiopic Enoch)	223
3. The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs	228
4. The Book of Jubilees (Apocalypse of Moses)	230
5. The Psalter of Solomon	231
6. The Book of the Secrets of Enoch (II Enoch, Slavonic Enoch)	234
7. The Assumption of Moses	238
8. The Apocalypse of Baruch	239
9. 2 (4) Esdras	241
10. The Sibylline Oracles	243
II. Special characteristics of Jewish apocalypse	245
1. Relation of apocalypse to prophecy	245
2. Pseudonymity	247
3. Its visionary-ecstatic form	250
4. "Tracts for Bad Times": the religious content of each apocalypse must be estimated from the historical standpoint	253
III. Question regarding the origin of these writings	255
Variously considered—
1. Fragments of the secret books of the Essenes	255
2. Pharisaic compositions	256
3. The product of scribes who were not Pharisees	256
4. Of Jewish-Hellenistic origin	257
5. Lay literature reflecting the influence of Oriental, and especially Persian religion	258

CHAPTER VII.

THE APOCALYPTIC MOVEMENT AND LITERATURE.

PART II.

IV. The main theological conceptions reflected in the apocalyptic literature	265
1. Its dualistic view of the world	265
(1) Sharp contrast drawn between "this world" and "the world to come"	266
(a) The earthly hope transmuted into a spiritual and heavenly	268
(b) History regarded as a unity with a definite goal	271

	PAGE
(c) The dualistic element crystallised into the doctrine of a direct opposition between God and Satan	271
(2) This new way of regarding history led to—
(a) A new solution of the problem of suffering	273
(b) The practice of reckoning the time of the end of the present æon	274
(c) An altered conception of the Messiah	275
(d) Chiliasm or Millenarianism	278
2. A transcendental conception of God and His relation to the world	279
This accompanied by a notable development of—
(1) Angelology	281
(2) Demonology, including the evolution of a personal devil	282
3. The development of religious individualism	283
(1) Emergence of the idea of a bodily resurrection for individuals	285
(2) No uniformity of belief as to scope, nature, and time of the resurrection	286
(3) The thought of a resurrection bound up with that of a world-judgment at the change of æons	287
(4) The new sinless world—"a new heaven and a new earth"	288
(5) Influence of the idea of a resurrection for individuals on whole range of thought connected with the "future-hope" of Judaism	290
V. Influence of Jewish apocalypse upon the New Testament	292
Seen in—
1. The conception of the Messiah in the Gospels	294
2. The vein of dualism which runs through the New Testament writings	295
3. The New Testament expectation of the nearness of the end	296
VI. The question regarding the permanent value of this literature	303
1. Bound up with that of the significance of the apocalyptic element in the teaching of Jesus	305
2. Theories of—
(1) Wellhausen and his school	305
(2) Baldensperger and his school	305
(3) Professor Cairns	307

CHAPTER VIII.

HELLENISTIC JUDAISM.

	PAGE
The Alexandrian Jews	315
I. Their environment : commercial, social, intellectual, political .	316
II. Their philosophy : an attempt to harmonise the Platonic philosophy with, and to derive it from, the Mosaic Law .	320
III. Stages in the development of Jewish-Alexandrian philosophy—
1. Alliance between Hellenism and Judaism prepared by the pseudo-Aristeas	321
(1) Chief aim of the writer to glorify Judaism in the eyes of the Greeks	322
(2) His "Letter" is, besides, an attempt to bring Jew and Greek together theologically	324
2. The Septuagint : basis of entire structure	325
(1) The work of Alexandrian scholars	327
(2) Linguistic peculiarities	327
(3) Traces of Hellenistic influence in the Septuagint .	328
3. Aristobulus : the first known representative of pure Jewish-Alexandrian philosophy	331
(1) An Eclectic	331
(2) Only fragments of his work preserved by Eusebius	331
(3) Aimed at—
(a) the allegorical interpretation of Scripture .	332
(b) the unification of philosophy and Judaism .	334
4. The Book of Wisdom represents a more fully developed form of Jewish-Alexandrianism	337
(1) Its finest literary product	337
(2) Hellenistic trend of book manifest (a) in thought and expression, (b) in its psychology, (c) in its effort to prove the existence of God, (d) in the conception of Wisdom as the intermediary between God and the world, (e) in its handling of the subject of retribution	338
(3) Significant as reflecting the Judaism of a period when strong efforts were made to secure the fusion of Judaism and Hellenism	345
(4) Theological standpoint of the writer remains essentially Jewish	345
5. Other literary remains of Hellenistic Judaism—
(a) Jewish Sibyllines	346
(b) Fourth Book of Maccabees	348

	PAGE
6. Fullest development of Jewish-Alexandrian philosophy attained in the writings of Philo	349
(1) The interpreter of the Greek to the Jew, and of the Jew to the Greek	351
(2) As an expositor of the Old Testament, Philo reduced allegorism to a fine art	352
(3) Philo's conception of philosophy	355
(4) His conception of God and the Logos	356
(5) Root-principle of Philo's philosophy: the dualism of God and the world	358
(6) Philo's doctrine of man as (a) an emanation of Deity, (b) a creature of sense	359
(7) Leading principle of Philo's ethic: the rejection of the sensuous	359
(8) His morality differs from that of the Stoics in having a religious basis: through Divine deliverance from the bonds of sense man attains the true end of his being—the ecstatic vision of God	359
(9) Philo's influence upon the development of Christian theology	360
