INTRODUCTION	11
I READING THE GOSPELS TODAY	17
Why is Mark's record called a gospel? Other possibilities of description. The term "gospel" and its special nuance.
II MARK'S GOSPEL IN THE CHURCH	29
Mark as Matthew's follower: a survey from Augustine to Holtzmann. The Markan hypothesis in Holtzmann and Burkitt. Form-critical attitudes in Wrede, K. L. Schmidt and Bultmann. Redaction criticism in Riesenfeld and Marxsen. How the matter stands.
III MARK IN THE FRAME OF HISTORY	51
Traditional views of Mark's setting (Rawlinson, V. Taylor). Marxsen's theory: the outbreak of the Jewish war. Brandon's theory: the close of the Jewish war. Assessment of recent trends and detailed critique of Marxsen and Brandon. Appendix: A note on Papias' witness to Mark.
IV MARK AS A THEOLOGICAL DOCUMENT	84
The rise of patternism (e.g. Carrington, Farrer, Bowman and Schille). The originality of Wrede: truth and falsity of the "Messianic secret" idea. Jesus as Son of God (Vielhauer) and "divine man" (Schreiber). Jesus as "redeemed-Redeemer" (Harrisville). Evaluation.
V SPECIAL EMPHASES IN THE GOSPEL'S CHRISTOLOGY	107
The Jesus of history and Mark's factualness: (a) prominence of human faith; (b) Jesus as teacher of the Twelve (R. P. Meye); (c) interest in the Passion; (d) human traits in the gospel. The Christ of faith and Mark's numinous christology: (a) Mark—"a book of secret epiphanies" (Dibelius, Vielhauer); (b) Mark's "high christology" of the Son of God and risen Lord.

VI	WHY MARK WROTE HIS GOSPEL	140
	The correcting of false Messianic notions (Schulz, Luz). The opposing of heretical christological beliefs (T. J. Weeden). An antidote to docetic tendencies (E. Schweizer). A supplement to Paul's kerygma.
VII	A THEORY TESTED	163
	Exegetical studies on the twin Markan motifs concerning the ministry of Jesus: (a) a refusal to give demonstrable proofs; (b) a ready consent to suffer and to taste the bitterness of death in utter desolation.
VIII	MARK'S GOSPEL IN TODAY'S WORLD	206
	The place of the Markan historical Jesus in the post-Pauline situation and contemporary criticism and church-life. The message of the cross and triumph of Jesus as God's way in his world. The form of a servant as a paradigm for the persecuted church. Mark's missionary motifs. Mark's message for the church, then and now.
