

Exemplarity and
Allusion in Macrobius'
Saturnalia

KATHERINE KRAUSS

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Abbreviations	ix
Note on texts and translations	xi
Introduction: Ethics, politics, and allusion in the Saturnalia	1
0.1. Macrobius' historical and literary context	3
0.2. Ethical allusion	5
0.3. Allusion and originality	12
0.4. Ethics and power	17
1. Scholarly interlocutors in the Saturnalia	20
1.1. Varro in the Saturnalia	21
1.2. Macrobius and the Noctes Atticae	27
1.3. Markers of class in the Saturnalia	42
1.4. Enslavement and the limits of inclusion	45
1.5. Ciceronian and Gellian interlocutors	49
1.6. Dialogue, authority, and dispute	53
1.7. Concluding thoughts: authority and allusion	56
2. Macrobius' Symposium : Plato and Plutarch in the Saturnalia	58
2.1. Macrobius on translating Plato	58
2.2. Sympotic etiquette and metaliterary moments	62
2.3. The Saturnalia and imperial sympotic literature	71
2.4. The symposium in Late Antiquity	77
2.5. Concluding thoughts: variety and luxury	83
3. Gender norms and philosophical erudition	88
3.1. Women and scholarly activity	89
3.2. Women and negotium	98
3.3. Virgilian women	101
3.4. Masculinity and erudition	105
3.5. Gender in context	112
3.6. Concluding thoughts: Cicero and Virgil as models of manhood	117
4. Macrobius' Virgils	120
4.1. Strategies of reading Virgil	121
4.2. Centonic composition	125
4.3. Virgil and learning	134
4.4. Virgil in context	136
4.5. Narrative, fiction, and imperium sine fine in Macrobius' Virgil	141
4.6. Concluding thoughts: Virgil, dialogue, and exemplarity	151

Conclusion: The cultural politics of allusion	153
5.1. Ethical allusion in the Macrobian oeuvre	155
5.2. Strategies for ethical allusive reading	163
Appendix: Humour and characterization in the Saturnalia	169
Works Cited	173
Index Locorum	189
General Index	195