General preface	x
Preface and acknowledgments	xi
List of abbreviations	xiii
1 The role of word meaning in syntax	1
1.1 The syntax–lexicon interface	1
1.2 Predicate argument structure and its discontents	2
1.3 Organization of the book	5
2 Word meaning	6
2.1 Introduction	6
2.2 Words and senses	6
2.2.1 Homonymy, polysemy, and generality	6
2.2.2 Linguistic tests for distinguishing senses	10
2.2.3 Caveats and complications	12
2.2.4 Disjunctive and conjunctive senses; facets	14
2.3 Polysemy and sense extension	16
2.3.1 Systematic polysemy	16
2.3.2 Pragmatic roots of polysemy	17
2.3.3 Sense extension in the grammar	19
2.3.3.1 Sense enumeration	19
2.3.3.2 Lexical rules	20
2.3.3.3 Lexical licenses	22
2.3.3.4 Coercion	22
2.3.3.5 Type presupposition accommodation	24
2.3.4 Copredication and dotted types	26
2.4 Vagueness and related problems	29
2.4.1 Aristotle and Eubulides	29
2.4.2 Semantics of gradable predicates	31
2.4.3 Approaches to vagueness	32
2.4.4 Prototypes and their relation to vagueness	36
2.4.5 Normative aspects of word meaning	40
2.4.6 Sense spectra and gradient senses	42
2.4.7 Probabilistic grammar and mixed categories	46
2.5 World knowledge in word meaning	51
2.6 Conclusion	55

3	Argument alternations and cognates	56
3.1	Introduction	56
3.2	Argument selection	57
3.2.1	Variable polyadicity and subject-object asymmetry	57
3.2.2	Object selection	60
3.3	Object omission and demotion	63
3.3.1	Object drop	63
3.3.2	Antipassive	68
3.3.3	The conative alternation	70
3.3.4	Dependencies between an object and its co-complement	71
3.4	Causative, inchoative, and result state alternations	74
3.4.1	Introduction	74
3.4.2	Causativization and anti-causativization	76
3.4.2.1	Non-directed causative alternations in English	77
3.4.2.2	Anticausatives	84
3.4.2.3	Middles and passives	86
3.4.2.4	Morphological causativization	89
3.4.3	Inchoatives and statives	91
3.5	Alternations involving multiple arguments	92
3.5.1	Direct and oblique arguments	92
3.5.2	Locative alternations	93
3.6	Unaccusativity	98
3.6.1	Properties of unaccusatives	99
3.6.2	Auxiliary selection	102
3.6.3	Split ergativity	104
3.6.4	Syntactic accounts of unaccusativity	109
3.7	Lexicalization of events	110
3.7.1	Typology of motion and manner lexicalization	110
3.7.2	Manner-result complementarity	116
3.8	Category conversion	119
3.8.1	Deverbal nominals	119
3.8.2	Denominal verbs	128
3.9	Conclusion	134
4	Lexical semantic structure	135
4.1	Introduction	135
4.2	Thematic roles	136
4.2.1	Basics of thematic roles	136

4.2.2	Pāṇini's kāraṅkas	137
4.2.3	Thematic roles in modern generative grammar	139
4.3	Proto-roles	142
4.4	Decomposition approaches	144
4.4.1	Ontology of meaning units	146
4.4.2	Situation aspect (Aktionsart classes)	150
4.4.3	Aspectual-causal decomposition	153
4.4.4	Argument mapping based on aspectual-causal decomposition	157
4.4.4.1	Role and Reference Grammar	158
4.4.4.2	Systems based on depth of embedding	161
4.4.4.3	A templatic approach	161
4.4.5	The lexical decomposition controversy	165
4.5	Mereologies, scales, and affectedness	173
4.6	Conclusion: the problems of polysemy and vagueness	182
5	Argument mapping approaches	187
5.1	Introduction: lexical and phrasal approaches to argument realization	187
5.2	Lexical approaches to mapping	187
5.2.1	The LFG lexicon	187
5.2.1.1	Predicate argument structure	187
5.2.1.2	Early LFG valence-changing rules	189
5.2.1.3	Lexical Mapping Theory	190
5.2.1.4	Syntacticized argument structure	196
5.2.2	The HPSG lexicon	199
5.2.2.1	Basics of the formalism	199
5.2.2.2	Valence and argument structure	203
5.2.2.3	Passive and lexical rules in HPSG	205
5.2.2.4	Lexical rules in Sign-Based Construction Grammar	208
5.2.2.5	Word meaning and argument linking in HPSG	210
5.2.2.6	Diathesis alternations in HPSG and SBCG	214
5.3	Constructional approaches	218
5.3.1	Introduction	218
5.3.2	Lexical mapping with argument structure constructions	219

5.4	Abstract light verbs in the syntax	223
5.5	Conclusion	227
6	The lexical–constructional debate	228
	Stefan Müller and Stephen Wechsler
6.1	Introduction	228
6.2	The pendulum of lexical and phrasal approaches	230
6.2.1	GPSG as construction grammar	231
6.2.2	Problem 1: morphological derivation	233
6.2.3	Problem 2: partial fronting	234
6.2.4	Problem 3: cross-linguistic comparison	237
6.3	Arguments for constructional models	237
6.3.1	Usage-based theories of language	238
6.3.2	Coercion	240
6.3.3	Simplicity and polysemy	242
6.3.4	Retaining the input in the representation	244
6.4	Language acquisition	245
6.4.1	The acquisition of patterns	245
6.4.2	Challenges for patterns: discontinuities and unexpressed arguments	246
6.4.3	The acquisition of dependencies	248
6.5	Abstract light verbs	250
6.5.1	Neo-Davidsonianism	250
6.5.2	'Little v' and idiom asymmetries	253
6.5.3	Deverbal nominals	255
6.5.4	Idiosyncratic syntactic selections	259
6.5.5	Is there an alternative to lexical valence structure?	262
6.6	Evidence for lexical approaches	263
6.6.1	Valence and coordination	263
6.6.2	Valence and derivational morphology	269
6.7	Arguments based on (the lack of) interactions with syntax	270
6.7.1	Introduction	270
6.7.2	want + HAVE and other verbs of possession	273
6.8	Conclusion	279
7	Some battlegrounds in the theory wars	280
7.1	The dative and benefactive alternations	280
7.2	Resultatives	289
7.2.1	Explananda	289
7.2.2	Complex predicate accounts	291

7.2.3 Complex predicates with scalar semantics	296
7.2.4 Light verbs and small clauses	300
7.3 German applicatives	305
8 Postscript	313
