

CONTENTS

CHAPTER XV

THE ROSSETTIS

	PAGE
I. D. G. Rossetti: publications; order of composition of poems. General course of his art as a writer. The Germ , contents; principles and practice of the 'Pre-Raphaelites'; Rossetti on the term	1
II. Reading; bent towards the preternatural. Inventive will and power, shown in early poems. The Blessed Damozel , how revised; elements of the poem	4
III. Italy: translations; The Early Italian Poets , afterwards Dante and his Circle . Schooling of Rossetti in Dante. Conception of the translator's business; achievement. Sympathy with religious feeling	6
IV. Sonnets: The House of Life ; technique; metrical freedoms used. The arrangement artistic, not chronological; leading themes. Other sonnets: connexion with paintings. Landscape	9
V. Ballads, romances, lays. Range of styles, from the simpler to the more complex: Stratton Water , The White Ship , The King's Tragedy . Sister Helen , its metrical form and purport. Eden Bower , Troy Town . The Staff and Serip ; The Bride's Prelude ; Rose Mary , its story and spiritual themes	11
VI. Dramatic monologues. Jenny : character of the supposed speaker, freshness of the subject. A Last Confession . The Stream's Secret ; Love's Nocturn . Other lyrics	14
VII. Poetic styles: the simple and the elaborate. Latin-derived words and polysyllables, their effect on rhythm; instances. Compound epithets, how used. 'Hovering' accent on rhymes and elsewhere. Freedom in rhyming. Varieties of style	17
VIII. Prose: Hand and Soul , its subject Browningsque; a landmark in 'aestheticism.' Rossetti as critic: work in Gilchrist's Life of Blake , its defects and value. Familiar prose, sardonic and satiric vein	20
IX. Christina Rossetti: Sources, character, and spontaneity of her inspiration. Titles of publications. Triple division of her poetry	22
X. Fantastic, ingenious, and lighter verse: Goblin Market ; The Prince's Progress . The Months , Singsong , carols	23
XI. Religious verse: sonnets, Monna Innominata ; comparison with Sonnets from the Portuguese . Independence of her religious muse	26
XII. Recurrence of certain themes; uniformity without monotony. Terza rima , monorhymes, variety of shorter melodies. Secular songs and poems: exceptional moods: joyous poems; lyra heroica ; France	29

CHAPTER XVI

WILLIAM MORRIS

	PAGE
I. Ease and abundance of his writing. Unity of his work discerned gradually; strain of prophetic speculation	31
II. Prose and verse in Oxford and Cambridge Magazine , compared. The Defence of Guenevere volume, its extremes of style; fitness of the discords. Its historical importance. Break with later writing incomplete	33
III. Life and Death of Jason , how built; classic elements. Chaucer and The Earthly Paradise ; temper of the poem, plan, range of sources, change of scale in latter part; preferences in scenery. Love is Enough	36
IV. The 'matter of Iceland'; first translations: tales in Earthly Paradise . Volsunga Saga . Visits to Iceland in 1871 and 1873; effect on Morris. 'Religion of the North,' how far really such. Conception of a catastrophe and a renewed world becoming plainer. Later translations. Measure of Sigurd the Volsung , its resources and risks; creed emerging; barbarous mainspring of the plot. Sigurd the highest work of Morris; its descriptions. Later verse; Message of the March Wind , etc.	40
V. Prose: discourses on art and on life. Larger view of art; connexion of artistic with social and political theory. Art and Plutocracy , Oxford lecture. Pamphlets and articles in Justice, Commonwealth , etc. Utopias and visions: News from Nowhere and Dream of John Ball	46
VI. Prose: other romances, from The House of the Wolfings to The Sundering Flood . Traits of the ideal community therein. A different canon from that of the tales in verse. Process from a more real and saga-like to a more fantastic world. Youthfulness and delicacy in the depiction of love; some comparisons	49
VII. Anti-Renaissance tendency, exemplified in style. Lineage of the poetic diction of Morris; the traditions he avoided. Anti-Latinism. Effect on his prose of translating from the Norse; gradual perfection; examples	51

CHAPTER XVII

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE

I. Swinburne's art, wherein impeccable; a distinction suggested. The four phases of his work: 1860-66, 1867-73, 1873 to c. 1879-80, 1880-1909. Later retirement and profuse production: five plays, five volumes of lyric or narrative, much critical writing	55
II. First Poems and Ballads . Mediævalism; ballads. Biblical diction, its use and misuse. The classics	59
III. Love in Swinburne, what. Briefer and more fragile lyrics. Commemorative verse: Baudelaire, Villon, Landor, Hugo, etc. Sonnets	62

CONTENTS

v
PAGE

IV. Mazzinist period: Songs before Sunrise , etc.; Swinburne's highest reach of lyric. Divergences from Mazzini. The religion of humanity; transcendental turn given to it; Hertha . Other patriotic and political verse	66
V. Arthurian matter: Tristram of Lyonesse and Tale of Balen	71
VI. Swinburne's nature-poetry, its character. A Nympholept , and Thalassius	73
VII. Atalanta and Erechtheus ; their place in the Hellenic revival. Their lyrics; Swinburne's exaltation of the Ode. Marian plays, and other tragedies; taste for the haut goût	75
VIII. Versification; its sureness and variety; an example	78
IX. Love's Cross-Currents . Literary criticism: comparison with contemporary writers. Shakespeare and the old drama. Wit and parody. Swinburne on Blake, and on the novelists	80

CHAPTER XVIII

OTHER POETS

I. Comparison with seventeenth century; principles of grouping; Sir Henry Taylor, Philip van Artevelde . Wade	85
II. Elders of the hectic, or 'spasmodic,' school: P. J. Bailey, Festus ; R. H. Horne, Orion , Death of Marlowe , Delora . Younger practitioners: Alexander Smith, Life Drama , City Poems , prose; S. Dobell, Balder , etc.	88
III. Lord Houghton; Ebenezer and Ernest Jones. Clough; 'perplexed poetry'; artistic and intellectual uncertainty; Bothie of Tober-na-Vuolich , etc.; the Oxford temper. Munby's Dorothy	94
IV. Poets belonging or akin to the 'pre-Raphaelite' group: Coventry Patmore: course of his mental journey; Tamerton Church Tower . The Angel in the House , its plan, divisions, and various styles	98
V. Patmore's odes, The Unknown Eros , etc.; their range and temper, features of style. Amelia . His prose: views on metre, and on the 'trinity' of religion, love, and art. Dolben	101
VI. Hawker: Quest of the Sangreal , ballads, songs, prose tales. Sebastian Evans, Brother Fabian's Manuscript , etc. Anne Evans. Dixon: Christ's Company , Odes and Eclogues ; Mano , its metre and subject. Gordon Hake, Madeline , The Blind Boy , etc. George Macdonald, variety of experiment; his prose romance Phantastes	104
VII. O'Shaughnessy: his affinities; his versecraft and temper. An Epic of Women , and Music and Moonlight ; treatment of Marie de France in Lays of France . P. B. Marston	110
VIII. FitzGerald: personal chronicle, isolation, reading; critical taste. Euphranor . Dealings with Calderon, and with Greek tragedians; his gift for re-writing other men's poetry	113
IX. FitzGerald: influence of the Persian poets on his style; Saldán and Absal , and Bird-Parliament ; the rhythm of Dryden. Metre of his Rubáiydt ; relationship to Omar Khayyám; revisions of text; the arrangement an invented one; no philosophic system	116

CHAPTER XIX

OTHER POETS (continued)

	PAGE
I. Pessimism in poetry of the time. James Thomson: career; early pieces; moods	120
II. Weddah and Om-el-Bonain , etc. City of Dreadful Night ; later verse, prose	122
III. Roden Noel: inequalities, variety of his muse; A Little Child's Monument . Buchanan: London Poems , etc. Jean Ingelow. Adelaide Procter	125
IV. The Earl of Lytton: his imitations and 'plagiarisms'; many experiments; Lucile, King Poppy . Lord de Tabley: Hellenics, plays, Browningsque pieces, lyrics; a poetic naturalist	129
V. Oriental and classical: Sir Alfred Lyall: Verses Written in India . Sir Edwin Arnold: Light of Asia . Sir Lewis Morris: Epic of Hades , etc.	134
VI. William Johnson (Cory): Ionica ; Guide to Modern English History . Margaret Veley. Mortimer Collins. Three professors: John Nichol: Hannibal , and critical works; F. T. Palgrave: Visions of England ; Golden Treasury ; Sir F. Doyle. Frederick Myers	137
VII. The Irish Poets: Thomas Davis and the writers of the Nation . Mangan: Dark Rosaleen , and lighter pieces	142
VIII. The Irish poets: Sir Samuel Ferguson: Lays of the Western Gael , and epics; his national service. Allingham: fairy pieces, songs, Laurence Bloomfield, Rambles of Patricius Walker . Aubrey de Vere: Irish legendary, and sonnets.	144
IX. Dialect verse: Barnes: Poems of Rural Life in the Dorsetshire Dialect : folklore, natural description; melodies. Waugh; Laycock	148
X. Humourists: earlier ballad-mongers and parodists. Mahony. Barham: The Ingoldsby Legends : the macabre ; metrical versatility. Aytoun: Bon Gaultier (with Sir T. Martin); Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers ; Firmilian	151
XI. Humourists: the scholars: Calverley, Verses and Translations and Fly Leaves . Courthope: The Paradise of Birds , and History of English Poetry . Locker-Lampson: London Lyrics	155
XII. Humourists: the art of nonsense. 'Lewis Carroll' and C. L. Dodgson, their relationship: Alice . Lear, Book of Nonsense , etc.; travel-books. Gilbert: Bab Ballads , and other lyrics. Tupper: Proverbial Philosophy	158

CHAPTER XX

EARLIER FICTION

I. Links with preceding period. Warren: Diary of a Late Physician and Ten Thousand a Year . Hook: 'high jinks.' Surtees. Smedley; Whyte-Melville	163
II. Marryat: his scene and method; Peter Simple, Japhet , etc. The Dog Fiend , etc. Howard: Ratlin the Keeper	167

CONTENTS

	vii PAGE
III. Lover : Handy Andy . Lever : Harry Lorrequer , Charles O'Malley , and other works, Carleton : his autobiography. Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry ; Fardorougha the Miser . Mrs. Hall	169
IV. Plumer Ward : Tremaine . Disraeli; comparison with Lytton. Vivian Grey . Satires : Ixion in Heaven , etc. Contarini Fleming , Henrietta Temple , Venetia	174
V. Disraeli : The trilogy : Coningsby , Sybil , Tancred . Israel	179
VI. Disraeli : Lothair , Endymion . Political writings : Spirit of Whiggism , etc. Speeches. Lord George Bentinck . Scene of the political novel	183
VII. Bulwer Lytton : Early works, sundry styles. Sympathy with crime; historical novels. The occult and supernatural. Domestic novels (The Caxtons , etc.). Utopia : The Coming Race . Verse : Lost Tales of Miletus , and The New Timon	188
VIII. Mrs. Gore : two examples. Mrs. Marsh : Emilia Wyndham , etc.	192

CHAPTER XXI

CHARLES DICKENS, WILKIE COLLINS, CHARLES READE

I. Fame of Dickens. The critical problem : 'Where is his world of character and humanity?' His creed and service; Carlyle's erroneous view	195
II. Reporter and journalist; virtues of his briefer papers and sketches; The Uncommercial Traveller	196
III. 'Excited and exalted' sensibilities. 'Pathetic fallacy' and its 'inverse.' Descriptions of places : waterways; The Shipwreck . Rochester, London; interiors; crowds	197
IV. Characters : descriptive catalogues; growth in power of outward portraiture. Fashionables, jeunes premiers , melodramatic women, and other failures. Criminals : Quilp, Headstone. Restless temper, and pathological experiences and studies. Verse and prose; Elizabethans and Dickens compared	201
V. Characters, continued : eccentrics and jesters; Jonson compared. 'Adroit idealism.' Veracity, and knowledge of certain classes. Perception of the childish and youthful mind	206
VI. The novels surveyed, from Pickwick to David Copperfield inclusive.	208
VII. From Bleak House to Edwin Drood inclusive. Change of method; greater concentration on plot, its results on Dickens's art. Plots that move in a circle	212
VIII. Inadequacy in 'exhibiting events as they might really work out'; endings. In recompense, truthfulness and humanity of particular scenes. The poet in Dickens, and his pathos. His characterisation really 'a triumph of style.' Varieties of his wordcraft; Flora Finching. Domestic oratory. Change of style in later books	215
IX. Origins of Dickens's English. His reading; eighteenth-century novelists, and works of fancy. Mystical element, and corresponding style. Fielding, Smollett, Sterne. Salient virtues of Dickens as a writer	218
X. Wilkie Collins : partnership with Dickens; plotting craft; The

	PAGE
Moonstone , etc. Collins underrated as a writer. Mrs. Archer Clive: Paul Ferroll , and sequel; her verse. Le Fanu: Uncle Silas	221
XI. Charles Reade: documentary habit; use of material. A fighting novelist; abuses assailed. Pey Woffington : Christie Johnstone : Never too Late , etc. The Cloister and the Hearth , its excellences. Griffith Gaunt	225

CHAPTER XXII

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY

I. The 'illusion of reality' in Thackeray; some of his omissions. The 'occult power.' Difference of quality between his comment and his story. His drawings	231
II. First stage, down to 1845, of miscellaneous writing. Irish and Paris Sketch Books ; articles, etc. Interest in villainy and roguery, combined with mimicry and the mock-heroic. Yellowplush Memoirs , phonetics. Catherine . Great Hoggarty Diamond . Barry Lyndon ; its literary pedigree	233
III. 1845-8; Punch , burlesques, Book of Snobs . Mass of Thackeray's social lore; class-feeling; the snob and the gentleman. His presentment of the parasitic classes; attitude to the 'people'	237
IV. Vanity Fair . Questionings concerning Becky Sharp: the 'pccetic' of the book; varieties of comedy	240
V. Pendennis and The Newcomes	242
VI. Thackeray and the eighteenth century. Esmond , and The Virginians ; their riches; the two Beatrixes. Presentment of wits, writers, and men of fashion, in the two novels and in The English Humourists . Some injustices. The Four Georges	244
VII. Last period, 1861-3: The Adventures of Philip ; increased daring of Thackeray. Recovery of power in Denis Duval	248
VIII. Instinct for burlesque; the grandeur of the flunkey; Prize Novelists . The Rose and the Ring	249
IX. Verse; its models and qualities; Thackeray's good ear	251
X. Method in fiction; power of imagining antecedents. Ironic manner of carrying off solid facts. Thackeray not to be compared with fantastic or lyrical novelists. Points of comparison with Tolstoy. Thackeray's true power	252
XI. His English, its even goodness; misleading result. Roundabout Papers . Musical quality of his cadence	256

CHAPTER XXIII

GEORGE ELIOT AND ANTHONY TROLLOPE

I. George Eliot: strange ups and downs in her reputation; her admirers and her censors. Attractiveness of her creed. View of life, wherein lacking	258
II. Early labours, and threefold equipment of observation, theory, and reading. Scenes of Clerical Life and Adam Bede	260

CONTENTS

	ix PAGE
III. Works, from The Mill on the Floss to Felix Holt . The labour spent on Romola	262
IV. Later stories: the 'middle-class saga'; position of Middlemarch ; Daniel Deronda ; the super-Jew. Works in verse	264
V. Employment of melodrama, crime, and violence; interest in casuistry; Bulstrode. Varying attitude to human stupidity; satire and wit	267
VI. George Eliot's creed and theories; her melancholy; the 'reign of law'; severity of ethical handling. Charity; sense of pathos; oppression of spirit	270
VII. Her style, its ponderous and pedantic side. Simplicity and beauty of descriptions. Qualities of dialogue. Fondness for 'confessional' scenes. George Eliot sometimes 'possessed' by her scene	272
VIII. Anthony Trollope: some titles; his method of making books	276
IX. The Barsetshire Novels, from The Warden to The Last Chronicle of Barset ; Orley Farm and The Claverings . Plots founded on some 'affair' of law or business: types of character	276
X. Political stories: Phineas Finn , etc. Trollope's simple canons of plot, situation, character; pace of his tales; the illusion he seeks to produce, and the price he pays; where religion comes in. Mrs. Trollope	278
XI. Trollope's world: exact topography. His treatment of mental 'interiors.' His girls and women; and lucid style	281

CHAPTER XXIV

OTHER NOVELISTS

I. The Brontës: chronology. Mrs. Gaskell's Life of Charlotte Brontë . Charlotte Brontë, her use of reminiscence	283
II. Charlotte Brontë: The Professor . Jane Eyre : reality and unreality	285
III. Charlotte Brontë: Villette ; M. Heger. Shirley . Scene of the novels	288
IV. Charlotte Brontë: styles, descriptions, landscapes	291
V. Emily Brontë: Wuthering Heights ; Byronic element: construction; style and dialogue. Poems	292
VI. Anne Brontë. The family spirit; 'Protestantism'; assertion of women's claims	296
VII. Mrs. Gaskell: the black country; her qualities; novels named. Mary Barton . North and South . Cranford . Ruth	297
VIII. Mrs. Gaskell: Sylvia's Lovers . Wives and Daughters . Shorter stories	301
IX. Miss Yonge: social stratum she depicts; Keble and the religious element; fertility of production. The Heir of Redclyffe . The Daisy Chain . Dynevor Terrace , etc. The Lances of Lynwood	304
X. Mrs. Oliphant: Autobiography . Chronicles of Carlingford (Salem Chapel , etc.) Some other novels. A Beleaguered City	307
XI. Charles Kingsley: literary record. Yeast . Alton Locke . Hypatia . Westward Ho! Two Years Ago	309

	PAGE
XII. Charles Kingsley : The Heroes ; various rhythms ; comparison with William Morris. Descriptive power ; natural scenery and objects. At Last. The Water-Babies , etc.	312
XIII. Charles Kingsley : poems : Andromeda , and hexameters ; lyrics	314
XIV. Henry Kingsley. Shorthouse. Black. Blackmore : Lorna Doone , etc.	316
XV. Some other novelists : Besant and Rice. Payn. Miss Braddon .	319
XVI. Samples of other wares : the novel of convention and pseudo-morality : Mrs. Henry Wood ; Mrs. Mulock. The novel of extravagance and pseudo-passion : Lawrence ; 'Ouida' ; her saving qualities	320

CHAPTER XXV

GEORGE MEREDITH

I. General note ; phases of Meredith's reputation	324
II. Poetry : titles of volumes, distribution of themes	325
III. Poetry : (a) As illuminating Meredith's biography ; (b) As a contribution to thought : (1) in connexion with the ideas of his time and circle, (2) ethical cast, (3) its special treatment of love, and (4) its mystical use of terms	327
IV. Meredith's poetry, judged as poetry. Interrupted felicity of form. Heroic verse : lays and ballets, Nuptials of Attila ; classical topics, Melampus , etc., and metrical connoisseurship. Odes on French history. Colloquial verse	329
V. Intimate verse. Modern Love : comparison with Shakespeare's sonnets ; ventures in language ; varied moods. Poems on natural scenery : Woods of Westermain , etc. ; their connexion with Meredith's creed ; A Faith on Trial , etc.	334
VI. Fiction : The Shaving of Shagpat ; orientalism. Ordeal of Richard Feverel , its classic prose ; the tragedy not inevitable. Evan Harrington , another 'ordeal.' Sandra Belloni and Vittoria ; satire on the English and enthusiasm for Italy ; character of the heroine. Rhoda Fleming	338
VII. Harry Richmond ; fantasy and realism mixed ; chaotic story ; richness and freedom of invention. Beauchamp's Career ; political tone ; growing change of manner. Shorter tales ; General Ople and Lady Camper ; Tale of Chloe	343
VIII. The Egoist and The Doll's House compared. Abstract ideas embodied in Sir Willoughby and in Whitford ; 'comedy in narrative.' The Tragic Comedians and its sources. Diana of the Crossways ; the debated episode. One of our Conquerors , a study in infatuation. Lord Ormont and his Aminta ; impossible fable, idyllic scenes. The Amazing Marriage. Celt and Saxon	345
IX. Physical energy in the novels ; comparison with Tolstoy. Their morality contrasted with that of other English novelists ; 'morality in training'	351
X. Creative gift ; two disparate species of character represented in the novels. Varieties of humour. The Blatant Beast	353

CONTENTS

xi
PAGE

XI. Problem raised by the style. Its plain foundation; successes in dialogue, and in analysis of motive	356
XII. Obscurity, partly the effect of unpopularity; variability of the style	360
XIII. Criticism; On the Idea of Comedy	361

CHAPTER XXVI

EPILOGUE

I. Aftermath of remarks. General features of period reviewed; absence of writers of 'world-significance,' either for thought or for art. Comparative lack of influence on foreign literatures. 'Imports exceed exports.' Influence of Germany, of France, and of Italy on English literature mentioned. Study of the antique	364
II. Comparison with earlier periods of our literature; their strength in each case. The quality of 'nobleness,' 1830-80; various usages of the word. Its consequence, the 'grand style'	365
III. Broadest trait of the prose of the period: 'rapidity and amplitude of movement.' More comparisons with earlier periods	367
IV. Significance of 1880 and of the following ten years. Disappearance of writers during the decade; survivors. Changes accompanying: first, the 'decay of liberalism' and of the creed of reason. Suggested rhythm in the history of thought, depending on the adequacy of reason to face the facts of humanity. The ebb of the rational spirit not good for literature at this date	368
V. Second change, in the art of prose: loss of rapid and ample movement; concentration on minute felicity; cult of the phrase	370
NOTES	372
INDEX	389