

Contents

List of illustrations	page xi
Acknowledgments	xiii
Introduction
Georgic modernity: sensory media and the affect of history	I
I The Georgics and the cultivation of “mediums,” 1660–1712: “sensible paths” and pleasurable “By-ways”	17
Introduction	17
The Georgics as “artificial organ”: magnifying small things after the Restoration	22
Joseph Addison’s “By-ways”: the polite pleasures of information	29
Coda: beyond the “principle of pleasure”	35
II The microscopic eye and the noise of history in Thomson’s The Seasons	38
Introduction	38
The “microscopic eye” in Locke and others: trouble in the “presence room” of the mind	42
Addison’s “By-ways”: reprise	54
The noise of nameless nations: The Seasons	56
III Cowper’s georgic of the news: the “loophole” in the retreat	67
Introduction	67
The news and the “not yet” history	72
The “task” of conversation: articulating the news	78
The unconvertible world: waiting for strangers	88
The flicker of history: Cowper and Walter Benjamin	98
“Vacuity of thought”: between acedia and aisthesis	101

IV	"Passages of Life": aural histories in The Excursion	106
	Introduction	106
	The husbandry of the past and the passions in the Georgics	112
	Wordsworth: the open heart	115
	The Excursion's seeds of time: anecdotal historiography and the acoustical unconscious	127
	Coda: floral histories and registers of muteness	140
	Notes	144
	Works cited	199
	Index	218