

Contents

Foreword ix

Acknowledgments xiii

1. Introduction: Scattered Souls—The Bildungsroman and Colonial Modernity 1
 - After the Novel of Progress 1
 - Kipling's Imperial Time 7
 - Genre, History, and the Trope of Youth 14
 - Modernist Subjectivity and the World-System 25
2. "National-Historical Time" from Goethe to George Eliot 39
 - Infinite Development versus National Form 41
 - Nationhood and Adulthood in The Mill on the Floss 53
 - After Eliot: Aging Forms and Globalized Provinces 64
3. Youth/Death: Schreiner and Conrad in the Contact Zone 71
 - Outpost without Progress: Olive Schreiner's Story of an African Farm 74
 - "A free and wandering tale": Conrad's Lord Jim 83
4. Souls of Men under Capitalism: Wilde, Wells, and the Anti-Novel 101
 - "Unripe Time": Dorian Gray and Metropolitan Youth 104
 - An "unassimilable enormity of traffic": Commerce and Decay in Tono-Bungay 115

5. Tropics of Youth in Woolf and Joyce 127
 - The “weight of the world”: Woolf’s Colonial Adolescence 131
 - “Elfin Preludes”: Joyce’s Adolescent Colony 142

 6. Virgins of Empire: The Antidevelopmental Plot in Rhys and Bowen 160
 - Gender and Colonialism in the Modernist Semi-Periphery 160
 - Endlessly Devolving: Jean Rhys’s Voyage in the Dark 166
 - Querying Innocence: Elizabeth Bowen’s The Last September 179

 7. Conclusion: Alternative Modernity and Autonomous Youth after 1945 195
- Notes* 215
- Works Cited* 259
- Index* 275