

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction:
Coloring Latinos, Coloring the United States	1
The Novel as Popular Culture	1
Race in Latin America	1
Latinos as a U.S. Race	3
The Novel in the Dissemination and Reconfiguration of Notions about Race	5
Chapter One:
Novel Concepts: The Role of the Novel in Developing Ideas of Nation and Race in the Americas	9
Mikhail Bakhtin, Georg Lukács, and the “New World” of the Novel	9
Benedict Anderson and the Novel as a Tool of National Imagination	14
Fredric Jameson and the Many Worlds in the Americas	16
Novels and the Fictionalization of Racial Attitudes	21
Chapter Two:
Enslaved Characters: Nineteenth-Century Abolitionist Novels and the Absence of Bi-racial Consciousness	31
Differences between Bi-racial and Mulatto Characters	31
The Myth of Racial Purity versus the Dreams of a Miscegenated Paradise	32
The Limitations of Nineteenth-Century Racial Representations	36
Uncle Tom’s Cabin and Bi-racial Characters in Nineteenth-Century U.S. and Latin American Literatures	38

Sab as a Nineteenth-Century Cuban Romantic Tale about Race	42
The Complicit Ignorance of Cecilia Valdes	44
A Thin Line between Black and White in Martin Morua Delgado's Sofía and Mark Twain's Pudd'nhead Wilson	46
Race without Romance in Antonio Zambrana's El negro Francisco	51
Chapter Three:
Mulatto Fictions: Representations of Identity-Consciousness in U.S. and Latin American Bi-racial Characters	55
Mulatto Characters as Racial and Cultural Nexus	55
Passing the Tragic Mulatta in Twentieth-Century U.S. Literature	58
Gabriela and the Sexualized Mulatta in Twentieth-Century Latin American Literature	63
Pobre negro , The Violent Land , and the Limits of Mulatto Characters in Twentieth-Century Latin American Literature	68
Joe Christmas and the Unmerry Existence of Mulatto Characters in Twentieth-Century U.S. Literature	72
Go Down, Moses and the Mumbled Recognition of Racial Confluence in the United States	78
The Bluest Eye and the Persistence of Anti-mulatto Fiction in the United States	80
Chapter Four:
Identity Against the Grain: Latino Authors of African European Heritage and Their Encounters with the Racial Ideology of the United States	85
Latino Authors and the "One Drop" Rule	85
Piri Thomas, Julia Alvarez, and the Limitations of Choosing Sides in the U.S. Racial Divide	87
Esmeralda Santiago and Negi's Persistent Puertoricanness in the Face of the "One Drop" Rule	101
Chapter Five:
Choosing Your Own Face: Future Trends of Racial Discourses in the United States	107
Latino Influence in Other Cultural Products	107
The Latin American Racial Paradigm behind the "Wigga"	109
The Rock, Tiger Woods, and a Universal Race	111
Notes	113
Bibliography	119
Index	125