

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PREFACE	v
CHAPTER I: The "Ratio Communis" of the Analogous Name	2
I. Texts which reject a ratio communis	2
II. Texts which imply a ratio communis	7
III. The analogy of names	12
1. The Imposition of Names	13
2. Id a quo nomen imponitur	15
3. Ways of Signifying	17
4. Ways of Being Named	17
5. The Extension of the Name	21
IV. Some analogous names	24
1. "Virtue" as Analogous Name	24
2. "Passion" as Analogous Name	30
3. "Word" as Analogous Word	33
V. Analogy and Metaphorical Usage	39
VI. Being is not a Genus	44
1. Species cannot be Predicated of Difference	45
2. Genus cannot be Predicated of Difference	47
3. Genus and Inequality	50
4. Aside on "Ens commune"	55
VII. Resolution and Conclusion	61
CHAPTER II: Metaphor and Analogy	67
I. Cajetan on metaphor	68
II. Analogy vs. Metaphor	71
III. Ratio Propria non invenitur nisi in uno	72
IV. The signification of names	73
V. Ratio communis and ratio propria	77
VI. Proprie, Communiter, Metaphorice	78
VII. Concluding summary	81

CHAPTER III: Metaphor and fundamental ontology	83
CHAPTER IV: “Analogy” is analogous	95
CHAPTER V: Reply to a Critic	105
I. Cajetan and Intrinsic and Extrinsic denomination	105
II. Professor Beach as exegete	107
III. Professor Beach’s confusion of the Logical and Real	108
CHAPTER VI: Is the term soul analogous?	112
APPENDIX	130